For instance, in paragraph 26 we find many medicinal compounds—antipyrine, acetylsalicylic acid, aspirin, benzaldehyde, beta naphthol suitable for medicinal use, salol, sodium benzoate, saccharin, phenolphthalein, resorcinol suitable for medicinal use, and so on—a number of very valuable and important medicinal compounds. I ask the committee now whether it is their intention to subject these important medicines to these exceedingly high rates, and whether they do not see any reason to differentiate between medicines and pharmaceuticals and products which are used in the industries.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I understand that these products are cheaper under the embargo than they were before the war, when Germany had absolute control of them. Take salvarsan, for instance. It sold up to the time of the war at $3.50 a dose, and to-day it is selling at about 75 cents.

The United States Government is paying only 20 and 28 cents. Prior to the war the United States Government paid $2.50 to $3. Phenacetine sold before the war for $16 a pound in the United States, about $2 a pound in Germany, and about $3 to $4 a pound in other countries. To-day the American price for phenacetine is $1.75; and so I might go on.

Mr. KING. The Senator has not answered my question. I asked the committee whether it was their intention to subject medicines and flavoring extracts and the various other articles provided in paragraphs 25 and 26—perhaps several thousand compounds, not dyes, not used in any way in the dye industry—to the same duties which they levy upon dyes.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. All those that are mentioned in that paragraph; yes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I can only express my regret that the committee, in their manifest purpose to serve the interests of the dye manufacturers of the United States, should impose upon the American people these high tariff rates upon medicines and products which are not related to the dyes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to my colleague that they are included only in case they come from coal-tar products or are derivatives from coal-tar products. All other medicines, of course, fall in the paragraphs where they are specially provided for.

Mr. KING. Oh, I understand that, but we know that with the development of the coal-tar industry new medicines and new compounds of medicinal and therapeutic value have been discovered and manufactured. Many new compounds have been produced of great importance to the health of the people. We do not yet know all of the possibilities locked up within the by-products of the coke ovens. It seems as though nature had lavished her choicest gifts upon the carboniferous age and locked her richest treasures in the coal measures of the world. The carbon compounds in coal are so numerous as to be unnumbered. The most beautiful colors, the most remarkable drugs and medicines are found in coal tars.

As I have heretofore stated, but a small fraction of coal-tar products are essential for the manufacture of dyes, but the Pharmacopœia and the United States Dispensatory contain the names of hundreds, if not thousands, of medicines and drugs and products of medicinal value which are yielded from coal tars.

Mr. President, I can not understand the attitude of Senators who in their devotion to the dye industry and in their determination to give it all that it demands are willing to place upon the American people heavy burdens in the purchase of medicines and drugs essential for their health and welfare. I can understand how Senators may support schedules imposing heavy taxes upon products used in the industries and in the arts, but I submit that they can not justify their course in imposing taxes upon the medicines that carry health and life to the sick and the afflicted throughout the land.

But it is apparent that medicines are to be taxed under the guise of protecting the dye industry. The sick and the dying are to be penalized to protect the pockets of the domestic dye manufacturers of the United States.

Mr. President, we shall continue to protest against these cruel and unjustifiable provisions, these discriminations and injustices, these wrongs to the American people. Our protests may not be heeded here, but they will find a sympathetic echo in the hearts of the American people.

I now invite the attention of the members of the Finance Committee to another provision found on page 13 of the pending bill. It reads as follows:

Provided further, That in the enforcement of the foregoing provisos in this paragraph the Secretary of the Treasury shall adopt a standard of strength for each dye or other article which shall conform as nearly as practicable to the commercial strength in ordinary use in the United States prior to July 1, 1914; that if a dye or other article has been introduced into commercial use since said date, then the standard of strength for such dye or other article shall conform as nearly as practicable to the commercial strength in ordinary use; that if a dye or other article was or is ordinarily used in more than one commercial strength, then the lowest commercial strength shall be adopted as the standard of strength for such dye or other article.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that this provision will lead to controversies and to vexatious and costly litigation. We know that various standards—if I may use the term—have been employed in the past, and that many of the dyes and products that are embraced within these two paragraphs have been brought into the United States in different chemical strengths or standards. It seems to me that this provision not only leads to uncertainty that will provoke litigation, but it is designed to increase the specific duty above that which is provided in the bill.

For instance, if a given dye was imported and used commercially in the United States a very small quantity, say 50 per cent paste, but the majority of the dyes imported were imported subject to a different standard, 30 or 25 per cent paste, it would leave to the Secretary of the Treasury the opportunity of imposing the duty on the basis of the lowest standard of the imported dye, and in that way perhaps double or at least increase the specific duty above the 7 cents per pound which is prescribed in the bill. Undoubtedly that would provoke litigation and controversy and result in serious injustice. I can conceive of many instances where instead of a 7 cents a pound specific duty it might be 14 cents or 21 cents or any higher number of cents, depending upon the standardization which may be adopted by the Secretary of the Treasury.

I ask the committee whether or not they considered the advisability of adopting some other method of determining the application of the specific rate? It occurs to me that it should have provided that 100 per cent pure should be the basis for the application of the specific duty, and then if importers preferred to bring in a dye under the 100 per cent strength duty would be paid on the actual dye content of the imported article, and if the committee deemed a 7-cent specific duty inadequate they could have recommended a higher specific rate. I ask my colleague whether that matter was fully considered by the committee with a view to determining whether some plan could not be adopted that would obviate contention and certain litigation?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the committee gave a great deal of consideration to this matter and virtually followed the recommendations of the Tariff Commission. I will say to my colleague that I wanted every provision made here so that the dye manufacturers of this country could not complain that the industry, being a key industry, as they say, was not amply protected without an embargo.

I have had a good deal of experience with the commercial strength of these dyes, and I know that what the Tariff Commission says is true. I know that when the alizarins first came into use I used to buy them by the carload. They used to come in barrels containing about 30 to 35 per cent of the dye product. The rest was water, and that water, being mixed with the dye product, was called alizarin paste. For years after they were first discovered and put into practical use those alizarin colors were furnished the American market only in paste form. The importers paid the freight upon that water from Germany to the landing place in the United States, and then we in the West paid the freight on the water, wherever we purchased it, to the mill where it was used. That first shipment was the commercial grade, known to all of the purchasers in the United States. Years followed, and through processes developed in Germany they learned to make that dye into a completely powdered form. After it was made into a powdered form I never thought of buying it in paste form thereafter. The freight upon 1 pound of the powdered form was just exactly the same as the freight upon 1 pound of the paste carrying about 70 per cent water.

Then as to the commercial strengths, there were two of them. There was the full strength of the powdered form, and there was the 30 per cent of the paste form; and where was the duty to lie? Was it to lie upon the paste form, as the bill that passed provided, or was it to be applied to the powdered form, with not a drop of water in it? Therefore it made all the difference in the world as to what rate of duty should apply to that product.

That is one of many. I could stand here for hours and call the Senator's attention to just such cases as that. The committee decided, upon the recommendation of the Tariff Commission, that that ought to be taken into consideration, and a rule ought to be laid down so that all users, whether it be in powdered form or whether it be in paste form, would pay the same rate of duty upon the coloring matter itself.

It was a question as to how to reach them. If we had taken the powdered form, the highest concentrated form of the article, and put a rate upon that, then it would have been an absolute embargo for all of the pastes of all those products in which paste is used instead of the powdered form. So it was decided that the proper thing to do was to put the rate upon the lowest commercial standard.

The black dyes, I suppose, contain the lowest percentage of the dyestuff in the paste of all the articles which come into the United States from a foreign country. Generally 30 per cent is called the commercial value. That is, that is generally the commercial value where there is 70 per cent of water and 30 per cent of the dyestuff itself, and that is made into a paste. Just as soon as it is possible to make that into a powdered form and a process is developed for doing it commercially and successfully, then it is done, because nobody wants to pay a higher price for the product, or a higher duty, or a higher freight rate. But there is an advantage to small manufacturers in using the paste form, because of the fact that when it is in the powder form, "dry as powder," as the old saying is, it is very hard indeed to mix that with water and make a paste of it, as it was made when the product was first produced; and unless you have a good dyer or a good chemist around your mill, or unless you have first-class facilities in the dye room at your mill, it is very much cheaper even to pay the freight upon the water in the paste than to take the chances of spoiling the powder in bringing it back to paste, as must be done before it is used in the dyeing of the wool or the cloth, or whatever it may be. I say frankly that I thought that policy was right.

As to whether the rate is too high, that is another question; but, as far as the principle is concerned, it is right, it is just, and it is as it ought to be. I say that, knowing well that this means that if you take the low commercial strength, say 30 per cent, and make it 60 per cent, of course the duty will be twice the rate fixed; there is no doubt about that at all.

Mr. KING. Or 90 per cent, and it will be three times.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the freight on the water would prohibit that. There is a point where the amount of water itself will prevent one from paying freight upon the item. This is right, it is just, and therefore the Tariff Commission recommended that the committee adopt it, and that is why it is in this bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the explanation which my colleague made is the only one which can be made, and undoubtedly it has much merit. Yet it does seem to me, as I indicated, that it will lead to confusion and to litigation. My colleague has indicated that there have been different standards of strength.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that it will not lead to any litigation, because of the very fact that in the case of every dye used in the industries in the United States the strengths are all known commercial strengths.

Mr. KING. It will lead to litigation in a case like this: There will be a question as to whether a given strength is in "commercial use." What is "commercial use"? One judge may hold that if it is used in Boston by one textile mill, one shipment of dyes would constitute commercial use. Some other agent of the Government might insist that one swallow did not make a summer, and that to constitute "commercial use" there must be two or more commercial textile plants using the same grade; or that a large section of the country must use it. So I insist that there will be a basis for controversy, which will inevitably lead to the courts.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not a question of what is used by one section or another. There is not an article, there is not a paste made from a dye, the strength of which is not given out, and every manufacturer knows the different strengths of those dyes.

Mr. KING. My colleague misunderstood me.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to my colleague that all they have to do in order to find out the strength of it is to determine how much water is in it, and that is done by the insertion into the product itself of a simple instrument. Every paste has a commercial strength. It is advertised; it is quoted as being of those strengths, 30 per cent or 60 per cent. Those are the two principal ones known to the trade in the United States.

Mr. KING. I did not mean to state that there would be difficulty in determining the commercial strength of a product. Of course, that is susceptible of proof, of demonstration, indeed, and the manifest which accompanies the imported article would probably declare its strength. But what I intended to convey to the Senate was this, that there would be controversy as to what constituted "commercial use."

Mr. SMOOT. The strength of one of these commodities would be known just as the strength of any medicine is known, just as the strength of alcohol is known, and it can be tested just as quickly and as easily. It does not pay to get them too low, because, as I have already stated, people can not afford to pay the freight on the water. Therefore the commercial strength is generally about 30 per cent. Everyone who would make it would make it the same strength, because of the fact that that is known to the trade. For instance, when alizarin pastes were first put upon the market there was only one strength, and everybody knew what it was. The strength was advertised to the world. I can not see any chance of litigation in connection with this.

Mr. KING. I have not made myself clear yet. I agree with my colleague that there is no difficulty in determining the commercial strength, but there is difficulty in determining the commercial use and out of this uncertainty litigation will arise. Suppose some person imported a given dye in the form of 70 per cent paste and 30 per cent dye content and that he was the only user of the dye in that form or standard. It might be insisted by a representative of the Government that the use of the dye in that form, or by one person or mill, constituted a commercial use and that such use, by one individual or mill, afforded a proper basis for applying the rate to all future importations. In this view an importation under this bill containing 60 per cent dye content and 40 per cent paste would be subjected to a higher specific duty, the Government insisting that the standard was determined or established by the lowest former importation for commercial use. Another agent of the Government might take the position that if a dye were imported in the form of 60 per cent dye and 40 per cent paste, he would adopt that as the basis or standard for fixing the specific duty and ignoring the commercial use of a dye formerly imported where the dye content was only 30 per cent and 70 per cent paste. Another representative might learn of an importation where the dye content of the imported product was only 20 per cent and insist that that should be the standard for fixing the specific duty, because some one or more individuals in some section of the country had imported dye for commercial use in that form.

Mr. SMOOT. Permit me to call my colleague's attention to this language:

If a dye or other article was or is ordinarily used in more than one chemical strength.

One shipment would not fall under the language "ordinarily used." Every strength is quoted, and every buyer knows what he is going to buy before he makes his purchase. A buyer is not going to buy a 20 per cent paste when he knows that the commercial strength is 30 per cent. It would be a fraud upon him, and of course he would find it out just as soon as he put it into the dye vat.

Mr. KING. We come back again to the question, What is the ordinary use? What determines the ordinary use in Philadelphia, the ordinary use in Boston, the ordinary use in some other textile neighborhood, the ordinary use in California?

If it be a fact that all of the dyes imported in the past have consisted of one or two grades, then there might not be much in my criticism, although, of course, if they were in two grades it is manifest that the officials of the Government could adopt the lower grade for the purpose of applying the specific rate; and if the lower grade were 30 per cent and dyes were brought over 60 per cent pure, then, instead of 7 cents per pound specific, it would be 14 cents per pound. So I most respectfully insist that there is ground for controversy, if not for litigation, in determining what is the ordinary grade, the ordinary standard of strength.

I have inquired of a number of textile men, and my advices are that there are different standards of strength at which the dyes are purchased and used. You can not say that there is only one standard or that there are only two standards. The point I am making is that by fixing the 7-cent specific rate and committing to the Treasury Department the authority to determine the ordinary strength at which dyes have been used, when there are more than two standards, you put it into the power of the Treasury officials to adopt the lowest, though it may be infrequently applied or adopted. "It is ordinarily used," they will say, "in Philadelphia, or in Boston, or in some district where there are many textile mills, and we will apply that standard as the ordinary standard," though the majority of the people of the United States who import dyes purchase those of a higher standard; and thus in the future those who import dyes will be subjected not only to the ad valorem but to the double or treble specific rate, according to the standard that may be imported.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator must know, of course, that most of the imports fall under the first provision, where it is provided that they "shall conform as nearly as practicable to the commercial strength in ordinary use in the United States prior to July 1, 1914." It is true, if there is any other dye discovered, as alizarin was some 25 or 26 years ago, and it were made into paste, of course the commercial strength of that would be announced to the world the first time it was sold upon the market, just as the strength of alizarin paste was announced when it was first sold. Of course, that strength will become the strength upon which the duty will be laid. After that, if they make a higher concentrated article than that which was originally shipped into the United States, bearing a certain commercial strength, then, of course, the extra duty would apply.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it seems to me that a great injustice will be done and controversy will arise.

Calling attention to paragraph 25, that provides by name for some 91 coal-tar intermediates, at 50 per cent ad valorem and 7 cents per pound specific, some of the intermediates provided for in this paragraph are very simple in manufacture and to-day are sold at only a few cents per pound.

Before the war I may say they were sold at a very low price, not only in the domestic but in the foreign market. Take, for instance, beta naphthol; the foreign price in 1914 was 10 cents a pound. It is proposed to impose a specific duty of 7 cents per pound and an ad valorem duty of 50 per cent, with the proviso that if that intermediate happened to be brought in at a standard lower in some places than in other places the lower standard will now be adopted and the specific duty of 14 cents per pound may be applied in addition to the ad valorem.

Take, for instance, nitrobenzol. The foreign price in 1914 was 6 cents a pound. That doubtless was introduced in the United States in varying standards. So under the bill and the authority given to the Treasury Department it might so transpire that a standard would be applied to determine the basis of the application of the specific duty so as to bring a duty of 12 cents or 18 cents or 24 cents per pound specific plus the ad valorem duty of 50 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. What item is that—nitrobenzol?

Mr. KING. Yes. Take, for instance, refined naphthaline; the foreign price was 1¼ cents per pound in 1914. Under the bill, assuming one standardization, it is subjected to a tax of 7 cents specific plus 50 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows that, taking these dyes by themselves, the duties upon a great many of them are indefensible. We can not defend them when standing alone. The real question is, Shall we take the coal-tar products as a whole and put them in as has been done, or shall we separate part of the coal-tar products out and make a special duty for them? What the Senator says not only applies to the intermediates, but applies to some of the dyes.

Mr. KING. The finished products.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. KING. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. SMOOT. So in the whole thing there is a policy, and whether that policy shall be carried out the Senate must decide. That policy, as provided in the bill, means that the coal-tar products of the United States are to be protected as a whole in order not only to establish but to maintain the industry in the United States. When I reply to the remarks made by my colleague I shall refer to these things more in detail. It is not because the committee does not know. There are many items in the bill falling within these two paragraphs where the rate itself could not be justified by anybody, but the principle is whether or not by taking these articles out and making them competitive and killing the items which are generally of immense production in the United States we could maintain the industry as a whole. Some say it would be impossible. Others think differently. That is the principle.

I will say to my colleague that the principle adopted in these two paragraphs and in the bill, so far as coal-tar products are concerned, is to take the industry as a whole and to protect it beyond a question of doubt as against the world, so that it may be maintained in this country on every item that can be made in the United States. I think that is a fair statement, and I think I know what is in this paragraph. Whether it is a wise policy is for the Congress to decide.

Mr. KING. My colleague has always been frank in his discussion of the coal-tar question. It has been called a problem; but when we come down to the germane and fundamental issues included, I think much of what is assumed to be a problem will be proven to be exceedingly tenuous.

The trouble has been—and this is a digression—that a number of corporations, headed by the Du Pont de Nemours and the Dyes Institute, and a number of lobbyists, like Mr. Herty and Mr. Eisermann and others who haunt the galleries and are here now, and many others——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Have not those who are interested in an industry the right to be here and in the galleries? Are they not public galleries?

Mr. KING. I have not denied them the right. I am delighted to see their smiling faces.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Senator is criticizing them. I might mention others who hide themselves and have a rendezvous in the Senate Office Building.

Mr. KING. The Senator may make any observation he pleases. He will provoke no controversy with me.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I refer to the representatives of German importing interests who are here trying to defeat this legislation.

Mr. KING. If there are any, I do not know them.

But I come back to the proposition I was stating, that if we get down to the fundamentals, this problem will not prove to be so difficult of solution as one at first blush might think. I repeat that the trouble has been that some of the corporations engaged in the manufacture of dyes have confederated together for the purpose of creating an artificial atmosphere and developing throughout the United States an incorrect and an erroneous view with respect to the industry.

I want to say to the Senator from New Jersey that I have no antipathy whatever toward the dye industry. Upon the contrary I am glad that there is a dye industry, and I would do anything I could in a legitimate and in a proper way for its development in the United States. The Senator from New Jersey, I think, in his zeal has misconceived the character of legislation required not only with respect to the dye industry but with respect to other subjects covered by the bill now before us. I think the Senator—and I am not saying this by way of criticism—in his zeal gave too much attention to the cyanide interests in his own State and looked upon the situation as presented by that industry with rather a colored view.

I repeat that I am making no criticism of the attitude of the Senator upon cyanide or upon any other schedule or paragraph in the bill. The Senator believes that the dye industry will not live in the United States without prohibitive tariffs and embargoes. I do not accept that view. The Senator entertains the same views, if I understand his statement, that were expressed by Mr. du Pont, who testified before the Finance Committee, that the dye industry wanted tariff rates so high they would be prohibitive; that, in addition, an embargo should be laid upon all imports, and, not satisfied with that, that the Sherman antitrust law and all of its provisions should not be enforced against those engaged in the dye manufacturing business in the United States.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. Let me complete my statement and then I will yield. Mr. du Pont undoubtedly was sincere in the view which he expressed. He is entitled to that view. Others who believe in an embargo, in tariff walls that reach the skies, are entitled to their views, just as much as I am entitled to my views or any other men may be entitled to their views. But I think the Senator from New Jersey—and I say it in all kindness—misconceives the situation of the dye industry and believes in these tariff exactions when the necessities of the occasion, even from a protective standpoint, do not warrant enacting them into law.

I now yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have indulged in no personalities in the discussion of the bill. I have not questioned the motives of the Senator from Utah in his position toward the legislation, legislation which has been advocated by men in the party to which the Senator belongs. I think the Senator, while he scolds and admonishes, does not quite realize my motive, or the high plane upon which I am advocating and supporting the legislation. I am not doing it from the standpoint of any personal interest or any political interest.

I am doing it from the standpoint of the national defense. I am doing it from the standpoint taken by every country that had the frightful experience in the recent war of learning how heinous, how atrocious the warfare would be which could be carried on by those who absolutely control the dye industry.

The memory of the war has not passed, although we are trying to forget it. The memory of the war should not be allowed to pass. We must protect our civilization. We remember how civilization was threatened by the industries on the Rhine which manufactured those dyes and explosives and gases that nearly destroyed civilization. But there is a higher motive that should impel every statesman rather than the selfish motive of trying to protect any individual interest. If the motives of the men in the industry who struggled so valiantly during the war to save civilization and who furnished the Allies with the necessary explosives and gases to counteract the German onslaught are to be anathematized in public I shall mention the names of the men who represent those industries on the Rhine, who murdered our boys on the other side with their poisonous gases, and who are here to-day by their representatives and agents in the Capitol trying to write this legislation.

The Senator from Utah questions my motives. He mentions the men connected with this industry. What wrong have they done? Was it a heinous offense for them to supply our soldiers, our Army, and our Navy with explosives? Was it a heinous offense, when for 40 years statesmen had failed to give proper protection to an industry and we found ourselves powerless when the war broke out, for patriotic American citizens to build an independent industry during the war? Has the Senator the right to question my motives when I now insist, as did the President of the United States and as did the head of every department of this Government who had anything to do with the prosecution of the war, as well as the officers of the Army, that this industry be protected in order that what happened from 1914 to 1918 may not happen again?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey may indulge in as much bitter declamation as he pleases. I shall not retort in kind. I have not misconstrued his motives; I do not challenge them at all. Upon the contrary, I said that I thought he was acting in the utmost good faith; but I believe he misconceived the facts, which do not call for this legislation. If the Senator regards that as misconstruction of his motives, I must confess that I do not understand the English language. I have no doubt that the Senator was perfectly sincere the other day when he advocated a tariff on cyanide. It is manufactured in his State, and the Senator believed that a high tariff rate was essential for the protection of the industry.

I am not criticizing the Senator for championing the cause of that industry, although I may feel that his position was wrong, and that the success of his efforts might prove injurious to the country.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I did not ask for a very high tariff, and the commodity had been on the dutiable list in previous tariff bills. Cyanide was considered one of the essential chemicals which we should have an independent industry in this country to produce. I have no apology to make for my action.

Mr. KING. I did not ask the Senator to apologize.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. But the Senator tried to admonish me because I asked for a tariff on the product of an industry in my State.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Utah has not tried to admonish the Senator from New Jersey at all. I was attributing to the Senator the highest motives in advocating a tariff upon cyanide and upon other products that are found in this bill. I do not challenge the motives of any Senator. I may think that he is mistaken, as I think the Senator from New Jersey is mistaken, and I have no doubt that he thinks that I am mistaken in my economic views.

The Senator from New Jersey is a Republican Senator. I do not say he is a "stand-pat" Republican, but he is accredited with belonging to the conservative or the Harding wing of the Republican Party. He is a consistent, hard-working, forceful Republican Senator. He fights for what he wants and what he thinks is right. I have not a word of criticism for the energy which he exhibits and the vast intellectual power which he manifests here upon the floor of the Senate. I compliment his State upon having a Senator so vigorous, so earnest, and so attentive to what he conceives to be the interests of his State and of the people.

Mr. President, it is possible some of my Democratic friends in New Jersey may not approve the compliment which I pay to the Senator from New Jersey, but I do it in all sincerity, and I want him to understand that if there is to be any controversy or acrimonious discussion in this debate it will not be occasioned by anything said upon this side of the Chamber.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I accept the Senator's offer to join my staff of speakers in New Jersey in the coming campaign.

Mr. KING. The Senator from New Jersey believes in high protection and he believes in protection upon some articles that amounts to prohibition. I do not. The Senator from New Jersey is just as earnest and just as honest in that view as I am in my opposition to that view. The Senator believes that the dye industry needs an embargo. I do not. I am not quarreling with the Senator for entertaining that view. I think, however, it is a mistaken policy; I think it is not justified by the facts. I warn the Senator and other Republicans that if they introduce the policy of embargo into the tariff legislation or into their economic system, soon they will be confronted with demands from other industries for embargoes, and when embargo measures are enacted rather than scientific or reasonable and fair protective measures, the protective system will be destroyed. That is the reason that Mr. Wakeman, one of the ablest economists writing for Republican newspapers, has denounced the embargo as un-Republican and un-American. He has vision enough to perceive that if we begin granting embargoes as to one industry, there will be no place where we may stop; that we shall be compelled to grant embargoes to other industries, and in the end it will not be a struggle for protection but it will be a struggle for monopolies, prohibitions, and embargoes.

Mr. President, in opposing what I regard as an unwise, impolitic, and unsound economic principle, I am not attacking the motives or integrity of those who entertain a different view.

The Senator from New Jersey in a very impassioned speech has stated in effect that he is defending a policy which is called for in the interest of national defense. Mr. President, I do not agree with the Senator at all in that respect. The dye industry cuts but little figure in the national defense. I grant that during the war the Germans used mustard gas and phosgene gas and one or two gases of other kinds upon the battle field. They introduced those gases before they were thought of as weapons of offense or defense by Great Britain or by the United States, but the chemists of the United States, as well as the chemists of other countries, were familiar with mustard gas and other gases, some of them before the German chemists were familiar with these important gases.

In view of what the Senator has stated—and I had not intended to refer to it—I want to call attention, Mr. President, to a statement which is made by an officer, Lieut. Col. Earl J. W. Ragsdale, who testified before the Committee on Finance. His testimony will be found in the dye embargo hearing at page 750. He was asked by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], a member of the committee, a number of questions. He stated that his residence was Norristown, Pa., and his business was the die-casting business. He served 10 years in the Regular Army and resigned with the rank of lieutenant colonel of the Ordnance Department. Senator LA FOLLETTE asked him this question:

Senator LA FOLLETTE. You speak now of the general chemical industry?

Mr. RAGSDALE. Yes, sir; I wish to make that later very clear. I found upon slight investigation that reference was made to the dyestuffs industry.

That is, the contention was made that Germany's superiority resulted from the dyestuffs industry. I think his testimony completely negatives that, as I think any searching examination of the relation of the dyestuffs industry to warfare in Germany will demonstrate. Further he says:

There were very few plants in this country which were equipped to make dyestuffs. On the other hand, our general chemical industry was very capable. I found at Niagara Falls a chlorine capacity which surely was greater than that of England; I found one plant there, the Hooker plant, with a capacity of 40 tons of chlorine a day. There were two other chlorine plants operating. I also found a process there which, to my mind, now equals or is better than any other process of manufacturing chlorine in existence. So my original apprehension about the manufacture of chlorine was not borne out by the evidence brought in. It is interesting also to note that we did not use any of this capacity.

Senator LA FOLLETTE. Why not?

Mr. RAGSDALE. There were other reasons—one was transportation; second, that chlorine was used more or less as an intermediate in the manufacture of toxic gases. That, again, involved the question of transportation of highly concentrated materials.

It was also considered better policy to concentrate our poison-gas manufacture in one location, where we would have it under entire military control, where we could do all experimentation that we thought necessary without spying eyes.

He puts his finger there upon an important fact in connection with military activities—

We also felt it was necessary that the complete handling of these toxic materials be under the same head. The advantage of this was afterwards borne out. The centralized plant was at Edgewood Arsenal. I conceived the Edgewood Arsenal, and it was built under my direction, although it was completed and amplified later under the Chemical Warfare Service, which was later organized in the early spring of 1918.

He refers to the activities at Edgewood Arsenal, and then says:

My original plan was for 300 tons of chlorine a day. The Secretary of War cut this to 125 tons of chlorine a day. This plant was built for that capacity.

Another plant had a capacity of 40 tons of phosgene. The complete capacity was never realized, although I understand that 25 tons could be produced.

We had a capacity of from 15 to 25 tons of chloropicrin a day.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator in the course of his speech, but I have some information which has been prepared on the question of poison gas, and, if the Senator has no objection, I should like to read it into the RECORD at this point.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, my speech will be so interrupted anyway that I think the Senator had better offer it in his own time. I hope the Senator will appreciate my position.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Very well.

Mr. KING. Colonel Ragsdale further states:

As this committee is interested in the dyestuff manufacturing, and as phosgene is the chemical which I chiefly recognize as entering into the dyestuff industry, I must say that against the capacity of 40 tons a day at Edgewood Arsenal, I would hesitate to say that the entire United States would use over 100 tons of phosgene a year.

I would like to go back to how I found the dyestuff industry. As I have said, it was a very small industry in this country, but what we did find was not encouraging toward the production of toxic materials.

Anybody who has examined the situation in Germany knows that the dyestuff plants were unimportant per se in chemical warfare in Germany.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I challenge that statement. I have information here that the dye industry had a capacity of 2,600 tons per month, not including chlorine.

Mr. KING. The Senator does not understand my position. I said "per se." I have no doubt that there could be manufactured in the dyestuff plants a good deal of gas; but gases could be manufactured in breweries and in various other plants in the United States. The dyestuff plants were not essential to the manufacture of the gases used in military warfare. They could be used for that purpose; they were adaptable for that purpose, the same as breweries and sugar factories were adaptable for that purpose, and the same as some of the witnesses have stated that other plants could be used for the manufacture of gases.

Proceeding:

As I look back over my organization of those chemists who were personally in charge of the producing units and under whose direction the various materials were manufactured, I do not recall the name of a single one who was associated with the dyestuff industry in this country. The chemists who had the greatest responsibility were recruited from the educational institutions and from the large chemical manufacturers, such as the Du Ponts, Semet-Solvay, and a number at Niagara Falls.

I have been noting in the newspapers the comments which the facts before this committee have provoked and contrasting some of the statements with the conditions I found.

Let me say at this point that a number of propagandists who have been urging embargoes and high tariffs, and who have spent many months in carrying on this campaign, have always insisted that the dyestuff industry was essential and indispensable to the manufacturing of the gases used in warfare, and they contended that the gases produced in the United States were manufactured in the dye plants, whereas the fact is that phosgene was produced in greater quantities than it could be used in the entire United States in the plants constructed by the Government, and that instead of utilizing any of the dye plants the military authorities preferred to concentrate all activities in the production of gases under their own control. I regard the propaganda in regard to this matter as the most misleading that has appeared in the United States within my recollection.

He says:

The chemical plant at Niagara Falls which produced phosgene did so under compulsion, true, not physical but moral. The correspondence files of the trench warfare section of the Ordnance Department will show numerous telegrams urging to be relieved of the responsibility.

The Semet-Solvay Co., after looking into the matter, flatly refused to manufacture either phosgene or chloropicrin.

The Stanford Synthetic Color Co. was in a bad financial way and undertook to manufacture chloropicrin. Officers from my office had to be sent there to not only take charge of the plant but to work out the process.

If chemical warfare had opened up to our young dyestuff industry such a wonderful vision as now appears, I should have expected a more willing cooperation. The willingness that I did find was one of pure patriotism rather than the idea of entrenching themselves in an industry which would thrive after the cessation of the war.

As for the dyestuff industry being regarded as a potential military strength, it unquestionably is. No more so, however, than the entire chemical industry of the United States. This industry has thriven in the past and was very strong when we entered the war.

I called attention the other day to the fact that the amount of capital invested in the chemical industries in the United States in 1914, before the war, was more than $3,000,000,000.

Mr. POMERENE. Three billion dollars?

Mr. KING. More than $3,000,000,000 in the chemical industries of the United States, and that the product for the year ending June 31, 1914, was more than $2,000,000,000. Let me say in passing that the amount paid labor was only 8½ per cent of the value of the entire production; so when our friends, who evince so much solicitude for labor, say that these high tariffs are necessary to protect labor, I want to call attention to the fact that the evidence shows that the amount paid to labor in the chemical industry in the United States in 1913–14 was only 8½ per cent of the value of the gross production, and that in 1920–21 it was only 8 per cent. Less is paid now than was paid in proportion to the value of the product.

Mr. POMERENE. And this bill will add to the cost of every necessary of life.

Mr. KING. Yes. This bill will add to the cost of everything, whether it is a necessary of life or not, that relates to our industries and to our lives

Continuing, Colonel Ragsdale says:

Personally, I am still interested in the potential military strength of the country, and I should like to see any condition brought about which would develop this industry as a whole and along healthy lines.

I shall not read it all. If any Senator desires to put it in the RECORD, I have no objection at all.

Let me read a little further concerning the Edgewood Arsenal:

Did you have the benefit of the experience of the Allies in the war to any extent?

Referring to the production of gases.

Mr. RAGSDALE. That depends upon the time. Prior to our entrance into the war we had no cooperation from our allies.

Senator MCLEAN. You did not need it?

Mr. RAGSDALE. No, sir. We had agents and officers abroad who furnished us with such information as we had, which was very meager. As soon as we entered the war the French dispatched to this country a very able officer, and later, at my request, two British chemical manufacturers came to this country and greatly assisted us——

Senator MCLEAN (interposing). You followed their advice?

Mr. RAGSDALE. In the inception of what later developed into the Edgewood Arsenal. As to the production——

Senator LA FOLLETTE (interposing). Were they dye manufacturers or general chemical manufacturers?

Mr. RAGSDALE. None of them were, sir. They had had their experiences primarily during the war.

And when we needed, if we needed at all, any help, we did not get any chemists from England or France. We got men who had had some experience in the war.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator suffer a question?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Who is Mr. Ragsdale?

Mr. KING. I stated to the Senator, I am reading from page 750 of the testimony. He was a lieutenant colonel in the Army and resigned after 10 years' service in the Regular Army.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Was he in the Chemical Warfare Service?

Mr. KING. All I know is what I find in the hearings, and they show that he was an able and honored officer, who served his country for 10 years.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Was he not sent down here by an importer, Mr. Metz, to testify?

Mr. KING. I do not know Colonel Ragsdale. His testimony is frank and honest and gives no indication of bias or interest. If the Senator wants to impute anything or cast any aspersion against Lieutenant Colonel Ragsdale, let him do it. I think Lieutenant Colonel Ragsdale will be ready to meet the Senator at any time.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I simply asked a question, and the Senator has not answered it.

Mr. KING. The Senator is talking so much about our soldiers that I should think he would have some little respect for this man, who had been an officer for 10 years and who came and testified before his committee.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Senator can not point to anything in my language which cast any aspersion on Lieutenant Colonel Ragsdale. I simply asked the question whether he was not sent here after he had left the service by Mr. Metz, an importer, to testify?

Mr. KING. The Senator knows more about that than I. All I know is what is here in the record of the testimony taken before the Senator's committee. If the Senator felt that that was important, he or somebody else ought to have elicited it on examination. Even if he were asked to testify, that would not affect his integrity or afford ground to question his veracity as a witness, and I do not think the Senator dares challenge the veracity of Lieutenant Colonel Ragsdale.

Proceeding:

As for the quantities which we had in mind, we determined that ourselves.

Senator MCLEAN. Oh, certainly.

Mr. RAGSDALE. And I must say that they thought we were nothing short of crazy.

That is, in the construction of the Edgewood Arsenal plant, I presume.

Our plans were to have a toxic-gas program which would equal that of Germany, plus that of France and England. We plotted a chart showing from the first use of gas how the percentage of gas shell had increased and the use of toxic materials in general, and we merely extrapolated that curve and then went some over it.

Their criticism—referring to our allies—of this enormous plant did not recur when we commenced shipping at their urgent request toxic materials to both England and France.

Mr. President, it is here shown that within a few months we produced toxic gases in excess of the production of France and Great Britain combined, and we intended to produce more than all of the belligerents combined. It did not need a dye industry for that purpose, and the dye industry played no important part, if any part at all, in the production of the gases employed in the war.

Senator MCLEAN. But in organizing your plant for the purpose of furnishing toxic materials you had the advice of the English and French representatives

Mr. RAGSDALE. Yes; we sought that advice.

Senator MCLEAN. You sought it and you followed it. Now, it is unnecessary to remark that if we had been isolated and could not have had that assistance we would have been at something of a handicap; but never mind that.

That is a statement rather than a question.

When did you say you entered the service?

Mr. RAGSDALE. In 1910.

Senator MCLEAN. And how long were you in the service?

Mr. RAGSDALE. A little over nine years.

Senator MCLEAN. When did you leave the service?

Mr. RAGSDALE. I left it in 1919.

Senator MCLEAN. Is this organization carried on now?

Mr. RAGSDALE. It is; under the name of the Chemical Warfare Service.

Then he says:

I have no interest in either side of this controversy except my natural interest that the military strength of the country be not impaired, but I am also interested that its finances be not impaired.

I would like to answer your question. To get back about our advisers from abroad, two of those advisers were purely of a military nature. One adviser arrived after our plans for the manufacture of chloropicrin had been completed, and he gave us many points which were helpful.

It should be kept in mind that Colonel Ragsdale is a military man, not a scientific man. Doubtless the advice referred to the shells and to the method of their use upon the battle field.

The majority of our technical information came through those officers associated with our chemical industry and educational institutions of this country, and from my associating with them I know their minds, in which the Nation can take pride, and I know they were actuated by the purest motives of patriotism and accomplished a great deal in a short time.

Senator LA FOLLETTE. How much advantage would you derive for the chemical warfare in the future by the establishment of the dye industry in this country, taking into account the very large and complete equipment which the country has in general chemical production?

Mr. RAGSDALE. My knowledge of chemical warfare leads me to believe that it is not in a crystallized state. I have a greater knowledge of ordnance.

* * * * * * * * *

Senator LA FOLLETTE. How about our development in that respect compared with that of the Germans?

Mr. RAGSDALE. We followed her.

Senator MCLEAN. How do you know that some chemist in a dye factory will not discover the controlling gas in the future?

Mr. RAGSDALE. It is very possible he would, sir.

Senator MCLEAN. I understand you to say that you did not think the dye industry was of any consequence.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I spoke of the past.

Senator MCLEAN. We are figuring on the present and on the future.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I would not assume that the inventor of the keynote of chemical warfare would come from the dye industry any more than he would come from—well, the tannery interests or something else. I think the chances are more likely that he would come from an educational institution, which, of course, is again dependent upon the general chemical needs of the country, because if we have no needs for chemists we will have no chemical institutions.

It is remarkable, in speaking of these discoveries of the key gas, and it runs through the entire history of warfare, that there has not been yet anything invented that has not a counter instrument.

Senator LA FOLLETTE. For defense?

Mr. RAGSDALE. For defense; even the submarine. We found the instrument was expensive, but we also found that we could keep the submarines down.

I think in the history of warfare the submarine enjoyed probably for the longest period of time a free field.

Senator SMOOT. Are you a chemist yourself?

Mr. RAGSDALE. No, sir; I am not.

Senator SMOOT. The chlorine plant at Niagara Falls existed before Europe went into the war?

Mr. RAGSDALE. Yes, sir; the Hooker plant at Niagara was built a good many years before we went into the war. It is true they did not make chlorine gas. They made bleach and they had a very good process and had done a great deal in that direction. The use of chlorine was then becoming greater and greater, owing to its extensive employment in sanitary engineering, such as chlorinating of water and sewage, and it was used either in its liquid form or as bleach.

Mr. Ragsdale proceeds:

In other words, if there were given to my control funds to subsidize industries for their potential military strength, I would certainly be subjected to severe criticism if I placed it in any one phase of the chemical industry, be it dyestuff, be it sugar, be it any other thing. It is quite conceivable that the by-product of sugar manufacturing or some other manufacture may be the raw material from which this key gas the Senator has spoken about is ultimately derived. I know that during the war we understood that the Germans were making a terrible gas which would penetrate our gas masks and have a terrible effect, and they were making it from the seed of some rare plant in Venezuela. We afterwards found out there was nothing to it. But still it was so conceivable at that time that a corps of chemists were put on the trail of this information to find out whether there was any truth in it.

* * * * * * * * *

Senator SMOOT. Who were the men who actually worked out the formula for the poisonous gases used by America in warfare?

Mr. RAGSDALE. The actual formulæ, or, more properly speaking, analyses of the gases which we originally used came from abroad. Our agents and officers sent us that information.

Senator SMOOT. Did they come from the dyehouses or chemical concerns or from officers of the French or English armies?

Mr. RAGSDALE. The two gases used most largely, being phosgene and chloropicrin, were used by the Germans, and phosgene and chloropicrin were known, although sparingly known, in this country; and then it devolved upon us to work out a process for the manufacture of these in the United States.

Senator SMOOT. You mean the officers of the Army?

Mr. RAGSDALE. I mean the officers of the Army.

Senator SMOOT. And did they work that out?

Mr. RAGSDALE. They worked the process out by themselves, and the phosgene was first produced at the plant of the Oldbury Chemical Co. at Niagara Falls.

Senator SMOOT. Was that produced before we went into the war?

Mr. RAGSDALE. I think it was shortly afterwards.

Senator SMOOT. You did not furnish, then, our allies with any phosgene?

Mr. RAGSDALE. We did not, sir; not before we entered the war.

Senator MCLEAN. You mean that the military men worked out the formulæ?

Mr. RAGSDALE. I mean those chemists who were thrown into the military service worked out those formulæ. They were not difficult.

Senator MCLEAN. They had the benefit of the experience, of course, of the chemists of the Allies?

Mr. RAGSDALE. They were trained chemists. We had the formulæ for both chloropicrin and phosgene worked out and production methods drawn up before we had any information from abroad.

Senator JONES. Those gases used in that warfare were known gases before the war, were they?

Mr. RAGSDALE. Yes, sir; they were recognized. Phosgene had been used in the dye industry and is still used in the dye industry. I do not know any commercial use for chloropicrin. There is one or two uses, but I am not acquainted with them.

Senator JONES. Then there was no discovery of a new gas for the war?

Mr. RAGSDALE. I was going to continue my argument, that after the Chemical Warfare Service was created and General Gilbert was put in charge of that as a separate service my further connection with it was purely one of personal interest.

Senator LA FOLLETTE. May I ask your opinion of this statement? Doctor Reese, director of the E. I. du Pont Co., said, before the annual convention of the Cotton Manufacturers' Association, May, 1918:

"There has also been much talk in the papers with regard to the wonderful advantage Germany had on account of her extensive dye industry, in that she could immediately turn all the great dye plants into munition factories.

"I do not consider that the presence of the factories themselves was a matter of very great importance to the Germans. It might have been an important factor in a small war, but the requirements for this great war have been such that their mere existence have been a very small factor."

Then, after reading the statement of Doctor Reese, of the Du Pont Co., Senator La Follette asked this question:

What do you think of that statement?

Mr. Baugham. I could not very well contradict it, because it was practically the argument on which I based my request to have funds appropriated for the Edgewood Arsenal, that even the chemical industries of this country were not adequate to take care of the enormous needs for chemicals as I then foresaw them; and I think that was unquestionably true of Germany, although Germany did more intensive developing in an industrial way than we did. What I mean is, with the capacity for minuteness that the Germans unquestionably have, they could go into a garage and make munitions. We are not psychologically so situated; when we want to make munitions we have to have the proper plant and appliances, and we have to do it right. So that in Germany I think they utilized their small plants to far greater advantage than we did.

I find that the address, or a portion of it, delivered by Doctor Reese, of the Du Pont Co., was placed in the hearings by the chairman; at least the chairman said "the statement will be printed." I find it on page 750, and I wish to read a few paragraphs from that address. Bear in mind that this address was delivered by Doctor Reese before the annual convention of the Cotton Manufacturers' Association, in May, 1918, which was after we had entered the war. I omit the two or three paragraphs which Senator La Follette read, and on which he based the question to Colonel Ragsdale.

However, the real assistance that Germany obtained from the existence of these factories came from the chemical organizations which they maintained. As this war has become, in a sense, a chemical war, these chemical organizations in the Germany factories have been able to assist the Government very materially in its prosecution.

Now, what were the conditions in this country? There was no dye industry of any great magnitude, but there was a well-organized explosive industry with a well-organized chemical organization. I might say that at the beginning of the war the Du Pont Co. had in the neighborhood of 100 chemists in their employ, many of whom were functioning along the lines above indicated.

It will be remembered that the Du Pont Co. was in existence for many years prior to the war and was engaged in producing explosives. It had manufactured millions of dollars worth of explosives during the war and prior to the entry of the United States, which were shipped abroad and sold to the Allies. Doctor Reese proceeded:

The first effect of the threat War was to call upon this organization to meet problems which seemed to be almost as insurmountable as those presented by the dye situation, since many of the raw materials necessary for the manufacture of munitions had been secured in Europe, just as the dyes had been.

This organization, however, was able to meet the situation in such a short time that the want of these materials did not occasion a day's delay in the production of powder. One of these materials, diphenylamine, which is an intermediate in the manufacture of dyestuffs, was produced on a large scale, and three separate and distinct processes were developed for its production. Dimethylaniline, another dye intermediate, was necessary for the production of tetranitromethylaniline, commonly called tetryl, and had to be produced, and a satisfactory process for its production was developed in ample time, as well as for the production of tetryl.

These accomplishments gave courage and confidence to the chemists of the Du Pont Co., and from the fact that this organization was manufacturing and using all of the basic raw materials necessary for the manufacture of dyes namely, sulphuric acid, nitric acid, benzol, toluol, xylol, naphthalene, nitrobenzol, aniline, and picric acid, it was perfectly natural to consider the possibility of entering this great industry.

The United States Department of Commerce in its report for October, 1920, says:

"With the return of peace it is evident that whatever the demand for dyes made in Germany may be, that country will never regain its lost supremacy in the world trade in dyestuffs. * * * The United States has abundant coal to supply the raw materials for making aniline dyes."

This is, as I stated, from a report of the Department of Commerce.

"Private capital has been supplied as fast as it could be utilized in establishing scores of factories and in training skilled operatives and chemists for actual and experimental work on a large scale. There has been an increasing tendency since 1918 to centralize or consolidate the domestic enterprises in order to cut overhead expense, utilize all by-products, and reduce the price of finished dyes. This has not only increased production but has developed the foreign trade, as shown by the wide distribution of American aniline dyes exported in the calendar years of 1918 and 1919. * * * The world-wide shortage of dyestuffs and the growing demand for both quality and variety of such materials offer every opportunity to extend the foreign market for American colors. * * * Germany, it is now conceded, will not be the strenuous competitor she was formerly in the foreign trade. Switzerland is the only country, other than the United States, now making aniline colors sufficient to meet its own requirements and able to export on a large scale, and the Swiss are dependent on other countries for the raw materials."

There appears further on the same page the following:

Dr. B. C. Hesse, an eminent American chemist, thoroughly familiar with the situation, who was chairman of a committee of the American Chemical Society in 1916 which made recommendation for protective rates very similar to those finally approved in the present Hull bill, and who is now an advocate of licensing, said before the Franklin Institute on November 6, 1919:

"To particularize: In the explosives industry the coal-tar portion is very simple, the testing out of new products very complex and detailed; hence the invention, development, and manufacture of explosives from coal-tar materials is properly wholly an affair of the explosives industry, so highly and efficiently productive and progressive with us and not of the still-to-be-created dye industry. The invention, development, and distribution of photographic chemicals properly belong to the photographic industry, now and for a long time past so well developed with us, and their manufacture belongs to our well-developed organic and fine chemical industry and not to the infant dye industry.

"The discovery of new synthetic remedies is properly the function of the many medical institutes and schools of research in this country; they can be manufactured by our organic and fine chemical industry, helped out by our large pharmaceutical factories and distributed by the latter; synthetic flavors and perfumes have for years been successfully made here at a number of establishments, and they have also conducted much of the research in this field; there is no reason, compelling or otherwise, why the struggling dye makers should share their work. In the manufacture of toxic and like gases for military purposes, whose invention and development belong to the Chemical Warfare Service, the largest single material involved and at the same time the one most difficult to import is chlorine, which in 1914 was normally made in 23 different factories in this country, and in an amount approximating 85,000 tons annually, while during the war we made a total of but 12,000 tons of toxic gas war materials; their manufacture, therefore, should be linked up with our going chlorine industry."

That is a very strong statement. The Senator from New Jersey has talked about the importance of the dye industry for national defense. Here is Doctor Hesse, one of the ablest chemists in the United States, who stated that 23 plants in the United States were manufacturing the most important gases prior to the war, and that development of poison gases and toxic gases, if we are to continue that development, is a matter for the Chemical Warfare branch of the Government rather than the dye industry or any private institution.

I may say at this point that recently in the Washington conference—and I regret that I do not have the volume with me—the question of poison gases was under consideration. Senators are familiar with the result of the conference and the recommendations which were made. Senators will recall that there was a general agreement to abolish the use of poisonous gases in warfare. Without taking the time to read from the record of the conference, I will ask permission to insert that portion of the committee's report in the Record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKinley in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

A treaty between the United States of America, the British Empire, France, Italy, and Japan in relation to the use of submarines and noxious gases in warfare.

ARTICLE V.

The use in war of asphyxiating, poisonous, or other gases, and all analogous liquids, materials, or devices having been justly condemned by the general opinion of the civilized world and a prohibition of such use having been declared in treaties to which a majority of the civilized powers are parties,

The signatory powers, to the end that this prohibition shall be universally accepted as a part of international law, binding alike the conscience and practice of nations, declare their assent to such prohibition, agree to be bound thereby as between themselves, and invite all other civilized nations to adhere thereto.

Mr. KING. I had no intention of calling attention to the statement of Doctor Reese, and the testimony of Lieutenant Colonel Ragsdale, had it not been for the observations of the Senator from New Jersey, who appeals to the Senate to grant this embargo and to give the high rates which are found in the bill largely upon the ground that it is essential for national defense. I have read what Doctor Reese, one of the chief officials of the Du Pont Co., said in his address in 1918. I have read from the testimony of Lieutenant Colonel Ragsdale and from the statement of Doctor Hesse, one of the ablest scientific men in the United States, to the effect that the dyestuffs industry is unimportant for that purpose.

Lieutenant Colonel Ragsdale very pertinently remarked that the chemists in the sugar industry will develop the gas that may be the most potential for war purposes. We all know that saccharine may be made from coal-tar derivatives.

Many of the coal-tar products constitute, as Senators know, carbon, hydrogen, and oxygen, but largely carbon and hydrogen, and the different products are the result of the arrangement of the molecules, the arrangement of the constituent atoms or molecules of the coal-tar products. So that we get from coal tar saccharin as well as a multitude of other products. Sugar is a product in part of combinations in which carbon forms an important part. Consequently these scientific men believe that we may expect in the sugar factories and in the laboratories and in the schools and in the colleges development for the discovery of toxic gases. It was indicated that our help in the war in a chemical way, in a scientific way, largely came from the military men and from the college men of the United States.

So all of this talk about the importance of the dye industry for national defense is to me without reason, and is not warranted by the facts. Doctor Hesse clearly indicates that the chemical warfare branch of the Government is the one provided for the development of these gases, and the testimony which I have read shows that in the war we manufactured under the direction of military officers, not of dye plants, the gases which we required. It is remarkable, in view of the importance attributed to poison gases, how insignificant was the quantity used upon the battle fields. Doctor Hesse referred to the fact that only a few tons comparatively were used, although we had produced in the United States prior to the war very much more than was used during the entire war.

Mr. President, when I was interrupted I was calling attention to what I regard as the pernicious and unjustifiable provision of the bill imposing, in addition to an ad valorem rate, a specific rate of 7 cents a pound upon intermediates and finished products, and I had called attention to a number of those products.

I referred to refined naphthalene, the price of which before the war was 1¾ cents a pound. By the pending bill, in addition to the ad valorem duty, we provide a specific duty of 7 cents a pound, or more than 400 per cent duty. On nitrobenzol we provide a 117 per cent duty.

Take the item of benzol-chloride. The price before the war, as I recall, was 28 cents a pound. The bill carries a specific duty of 7 cents a pound and an ad valorem duty of 60 per cent. On aniline oil 7 cents a pound was the foreign price before the war. We impose a duty of 7 cents a pound, specific, which is 100 per cent, and an ad valorem duty as an intermediate of 50 per cent.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The information that I have from the Tariff Commission is that as aniline oil invades the price in Germany in 1914 was 8 cents, and in 1921 our United States sales price was 22 cents. When the value was higher in 1914 the price was 8 cents, and even now Germany could import it as against 22 cents. So I think a 50 per cent duty is not out of the way.

Mr. KING. The price of 7 cents a pound was furnished me by Mr. North, of the Tariff Commission, who made the computation at my request. He stated to me that the domestic price for aniline oil in 1921 was 22 cents; that the foreign price in 1914 was 7 cents. A specific rate of 7 cents per pound would be 100 per cent, and in addition the bill carries a high ad valorem duty. What the Senator says as to the domestic price is true. It simply means that the domestic producers are now charging more than 200 per cent more than the foreign price before the war.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Did not the Senator mention some other figure—a figure of 16 cents, or was it 7 cents?

Mr. KING. I mentioned 7 cents.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Our production cost is 22 cents now, and in Germany 7 cents. Even with a 7-cent duty and 50 per cent ad valorem Germany could put it here at 17½ cents.

Mr. KING. The difference between the Senator and myself arises from the fact that he wants to preserve these peak prices and to frame a tariff bill upon war prices or present prices, assuming that present prices are the ones which should obtain in the United States and should be projected indefinitely into peace times.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Senator has picked out one or two of the largest products, but he has left out some of those on which there is a very wide differential.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, I did that for the purpose of emphasizing the unfairness of a specific duty and applying it to articles where there was such a wide range in prices. The Senator did not understand my point, or, perhaps, he was called from the Chamber when I attempted to make it. I agree with the Senator that I did not mention, although I intend to later, a number of high-priced dyes. A specific of 7 cents a pound, if one believes in a specific duty, would be entirely fair. I would have no complaint about that, but I was complaining about the provision of the bill, if the Senator will honor me with his attention, which gave the same specific rate to these cheap dyes, 1¾ cents and 1 cent a pound being the pre-war price, of 7 cents a pound, as the dyes, the pre-war price and the domestic price of which now is perhaps 50 or 60 or 70 cents or a dollar a pound.

I have called attention to the unfairness and discrimination hoping that the committee would offer an amendment that would meet the situation in a just and proper manner.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Senator knows that during the war, when the textile men came to Congress and asked for duties, we fixed at that time a specific duty of 5 cents and 35 per cent ad valorem. That was in 1916. That was before the fall in exchange. The specific duty at the present time covers those articles which are absolutely necessary to be protected, and protected drastically. If there is to be a dye industry at all on these intermediates, we must absolutely protect the intermediates as essential to the manufactured product. It is like the Aladdin ready-made house, if we bring the house here and assemble it. It is the same way with the intermediates. If we do not protect them properly, the German industry will bring their assembling plants here and simply assemble those products, and command the dye industry or those products from which dyes are made. That is the position of the committee; it is essential to have a minimum specific and then a compound rate, with a 50-cent ad valorem duty, in order to cover the wide differential.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I regret that my appeals have not found a readier response in the heart of the Senator from New Jersey and that I have been unable to make a convert of him. I appreciate his position, and it was stated somewhat more fully by my colleague, the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot], a few moments ago.

The theory seems to be that we must penalize the cheaper products by imposing higher rates upon them, thus laying upon the greater number of users of cheap products the heaviest burdens; burdens which result from this crafty and subtle method of indirect taxation. A dye that cost 1, 2, 3, or 4, or 7 cents a pound before the war is subjected to a specific duty of 7 cents a pound in addition to an ad valorem duty, so that the tariff may amount to 300 or 400 per cent; and this upon the theory that we must get as much as we can out of the products which are used universally or in bulk, because we will not get so much profit out of the articles which are not used in such large quantities. Mr. President, I do not think that view is justifiable. I do not think it is sound economics or that it is just and fair.

Why should the textile people or those who use the cheaper dyes—indigo, sulphur black, direct black, and two or three other dyes, which constitute 50 per cent of the entire production of the country, which are made cheaply and which are used in such great abundance—be taxed so high, 7 cents specific and 60 per cent ad valorem, and the same compound rate be applied to dyes that sell for from 50 cents to 60 cents a pound or perhaps a dollar a pound? I submit that, from my viewpoint, it can not be justified in morals or upon sound economic theory. I grant that it increases the profits of the manufacturer.

I said a moment ago that three or four dyes—indigo, sulphur black, direct black, and one or two others—constitute 50 per cent, approximately, of the entire dye product of the United States. In 1920 we manufactured, as a result, 88,000,000 pounds of dyes. Approximately 50 per cent of those were of the dyes that could be manufactured cheaply; yet it is now proposed to put this enormous specific rate of duty upon them, the same specific rate that we put upon the other dyes, many of which were only manufactured to the extent of a few hundred thousand or possibly million pounds, and the prices of which range from 5 cents up to several dollars a pound.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Did the Senator from Utah state that sulphur black and indigo constituted 50 per cent of the production of the United States?

Mr. KING. I stated that those two and two or three others—approximately four—including sulphur black and indigo, as I recall, constitute between 30 and 40 per cent of the entire production in the United States.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. In the interest of accuracy, let us have the correct figures. Sulphur black in 1920 constituted 18.5 per cent of our total dye production, and in 1921 it constituted 20 per cent. Indigo in 1920 constituted 20 per cent of our total dye production and in 1921 it constituted 17 per cent. Sulphur black and indigo therefore in 1920 constituted 38.5 per cent of our total dye production and in 1920 they constituted 37 per cent of that production.

Mr. KING. I said they constituted between 35 and 40 per cent. The Senator from New Jersey has the document before him and has read from it, while I spoke from memory, but I did not miss it very far. I gave the minimum and the maximum. I thank the Senator, however, for having given the figures.

Mr. President, the same criticism which I am making with respect to the intermediates because of the specific rate is applicable to paragraph 26, which deals with the finished products. A few moments ago, when I was interrupted by my colleague, I was stating that the preliminary summary of the census of dyes and of coal-tar chemicals for 1921 prepared by the Tariff Commission shows that the average price per pound of coal-tar intermediates in the United States for the calendar year 1921 was 25 cents. While some of these intermediates are to-day selling for only a few cents per pound, others are selling for upward of $1 per pound. It can readily be seen that the specific rate of duty of 7 cents per pound offers a high protection for the intermediates selling for a few cents per pound and affords only limited protection for those dyes selling in excess of $1 per pound. Refined naphthalene is selling to-day at 7 cents per pound, so the specific rate is equivalent to 100 per cent protection based on American valuation. Nitrobenzene is selling for 9½ cents to 12 cents per pound, chlorobenzene for 8 to 12 cents per pound, phenol for 12 to 16 cents per pound, and aniline oil for 15½ to 17 cents per pound and ortho nitrotoluene for 12 to 14 cents per pound. It is evident that the specific rate of 7 cents per pound alone is equivalent to a protection of 50 per cent ad valorem based on American valuation of these simple coal-tar intermediates.

It is logical that the commodities provided for in paragraph 25 should be divided into at least three classes. All those intermediates which are simple in manufacture and not far removed in process of manufacture from the coal-tar crudes from which they are derived should be provided for at one compound rate of duty, while all those intermediates which require a greater number of steps in the process of manufacture and whose costs of production are higher should be provided for by a higher compound rate, while those intermediates which require one or two steps in manufacture to convert them into the finished coal-tar products should be provided for by a still higher rate of duty, and most probably at a rate of duty the same as that of the finished coal-tar product. In this last category may be placed dehydrothiotoluidine and tetramethyldiaminobenzophenol (otherwise known as Michlersketone), and so forth, which products are converted into the finished dyes with only one or two operations.

I am assuming, of course, in making these suggestions, recommendatory in form, that one believes in the imposition of tariff rates both specific and ad valorem and that this industry calls for some protection. Those who believe in protection for the industry, it seems to me, ought to adopt a classification that would deal fairly and justly with the people and not impose a tariff rate of 400 per cent upon one coal-tar intermediate and 50 or 60 or 70 per cent upon another intermediate coal-tar product. I submit that that is discrimination which is not warranted and which may not be defended. It could easily be arranged to classify these intermediates—it could be more easily done than to classify the finished products—so that the injustices to which I have referred might in part be obviated.

In like manner certain of the coal-tar dyes in paragraph 26—that is the paragraph dealing with the finished products—should be provided for at a lower rate of duty than those dyes which are more complicated in structure, more difficult to manufacture, and most costly to produce. For instance, indigo and sulphur black and other sulphur products illustrate the point that I am making. Sulphur black is to-day being sold in this country at practically pre-war prices, namely, 16 to 20 cents per pound. Indigo and sulphur black are consumed in this country in larger quantities than any other two dyes and, no doubt, the cost of manufacture of these two dyes is almost as low as in any country in the world.

I want to digress at this point, Mr. President, to again invite attention, and I apologize for so doing, to the situation in which other countries find themselves, particularly Germany and Switzerland, with respect to intermediates, which are the basis, after the crudes, for these dye products.

During 1921 Switzerland sent to the United States substantially the same quantity of dyes as did Germany. Switzerland is largely, if not wholly, dependent for her intermediates upon other countries. We are not; because of our enormous coke-oven industry, we produce great quantities of the crudes and the intermediates. I do not carry the figures in my mind, but my recollection is that in 1918 we produced of intermediates 200,000 or 300,000 tons, enough intermediates to supply over and over again the demands of all the countries of the world for the manufacture of dyes.

Great Britain manufactures some dyes; but investigation, I think, will establish the fact that we can compete with Great Britain in the manufacture of intermediates. France, now that she has had restored to her some of the coal fields which were taken from Germany, can produce her own intermediates; but Germany, under the Versailles treaty, has parted with a large part of her primary products. Her coal, her iron, her potash, and many other products that gave her more or less of primacy in some industries have been taken from her in large measure; she has lost a large part of her coal mines in Silesia; she has lost one-eighth of her important territory and a considerable part of her population, and a large part of her capital—I have heard it estimated all the way from one-eighth to one-fifteenth of her capital.

Be that as it may, as a result of the war she has lost a large part of her territory from whence she derived her primary products. She has been saddled with an enormous debt—a debt which up to the present time she gives no indication of her capacity to meet—and has been confronted with a situation that seems to portend, if not financial chaos in Germany, a situation that it will take many years to enable Germany to extricate herself from. When Senators talk about Germany being a formidable rival to the United States, it seems to me that they discredit the genius, the ability, the resources of their own country. Germany, with 2,000,000 of her men killed and millions disabled, with much of her home land taken, with a great debt which has been placed upon her, with no ships to transport her products except the few which she has constructed and a limited number which she has been able to purchase—to speak of her as being the competitor of this great Nation is to me to discredit the American people and our own institutions.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Germany's production of dyes alone in 1922 was 190,000,000, as against 295,000,000 in 1913. That does not show much loss of man power.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, that would not prove anything at all. As a matter of fact, I do not think the Senator is accurate in stating that the production of dyes was nearly 200,000,000 pounds.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That is by rate of marks.

Mr. KING. Oh, by rate of marks. As a matter of fact, the production of dyes—and I speak only from memory—was about 110,000,000 pounds, not 190,000,000 pounds. We produced annually between 1918 and 1920, inclusive, between sixty-five and eighty-eight million pounds of dyes.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I state this—that in 1913 Germany produced 295,000,000 pounds of dyes, and in 1922, in March, at the rate of 190,000,000 pounds.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator says "at the rate of 190,000,000 pounds." I have known factories to turn out, under some stress of circumstances, a tremendous amount in a day or in a month; but it would not be a wise man who would predicate the production upon some extraneous or unique or contingent circumstance. I grant that Germany is producing dyes. I deny that Germany can produce dyes any cheaper than they can be produced in the United States, or that she can equal the quantity production of the United States. Of course, if we intend, and that seems the design of this bill, to maintain these high levels of prices, then a different situation will obtain; but I had supposed that the Senator from New Jersey, being such a warm admirer of President Harding, and following so loyally his chief, believed in the statement of the President that "we must return to normalcy," and that he would facilitate the work of his leader and aid in restoring normal conditions; but the Senator, I am afraid, shows heretical tendencies. He is rather heterodox instead of being orthodox. He does not want to return to normalcy. He wants to preserve these war levels, these high prices of the manufacturers, the doubling and trebling and quadrupling of the prices of dyes to the textile industry of the United States over prices which obtained in 1913 and in 1914 and in pre-war years. I do not believe that that is a wholesome situation.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah further yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. When the Senator speaks of heresy to a chief, I refer him to the message of President Wilson, dated May 20, 1919——

Mr. KING. I am familiar with it. It has been referred to many times in the Senate.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. In which the President urges that we must have complete independence from Germany in the dyestuff industry, and he has urged it twice. He thought it so important that he radioed it from France.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, any recommendation made by President Wilson would attract my attention as it would attract the attention of people everywhere. His statesmanship, his great vision, and his fine leadership justified his party in following most of his recommendations. No one claims him to have been infallible. Like all leaders, he was dependent upon the recommendations and investigations of subordinates. Some of his subordinates were inefficient and incompetent, and doubtless some were selfish. That always happens, and the greatest leaders have often been the victims of misinformation and misplaced confidence.

President Wilson undoubtedly was pressed to make strong recommendations in behalf of the dye industry. I have no doubt that statements were submitted to him which were inaccurate, and, of course, upon the facts presented he was compelled to act. It is quite likely that President Wilson was told that Germany at the close of the war was in possession of large quantities of dyes and was in a position to flood the world with dyes at prices so low as to temporarily at least destroy production in many countries in the world. Undoubtedly he accepted the representations made, and, as I have indicated, suggested to Congress legislation for the protection of the domestic dye industry. If he had known of the facts, I have no doubt but what his recommendations would have been entirely different.

There was hysteria during the war, and immediately following the war, with respect to national preparedness and the importance of the dye industry to accomplish that end. A most persistent, well-planned, well-executed, and subtle campaign was carried on in all parts of the United States to secure prohibitive tariff duties upon dyes as well as an embargo. I do not believe there ever has been so extensive a propaganda; one so cleverly conceived, so adroitly executed, and so effectively pursued as that devised by the Chemical Foundation, the Dyes Institute, and the domestic dye producers of the United States, including representatives of the Textile Alliance Association—all of whom confederated and conspired to visit various parts of the United States and to address societies, organizations, and associations.

Chambers of Commerce; business men's, Rotary, and Kiwanis clubs; patriotic organizations; the American Legion; and medical and chemical organizations have been importuned to permit representatives of the Chemical Foundation and the Dyes Institute to address them, ostensibly upon the question of national preparedness or the development of the chemical industry of the United States, but primarily to secure the adoption of resolutions in favor of a dye embargo or prohibitive tariff rates applicable to dyes and all forms of coal-tar products.

Many of the people of the United States were deceived by this nation-wide propaganda. The campaign of the dye interests of the United States and the Chemical Foundation and the Dyes Institute and the Textile Alliance has not ceased. Their agents and representatives, hundreds of them, are active and energetic; they are here in the Capitol; they secure the aid of the press, and they are bending every effort to push through this bill, which grants to the domestic dye producers a complete monopoly and which will enable the manufacturers of drugs, medicines, and pharmaceuticals to exploit the American people, because under the terms of the embargo hundreds of medicines and drugs may not be imported into the United States.

I deny that President Wilson intended that rates should be so high as to exclude the importation of dyes, and I deny that he intended that a monopoly should be created or that an embargo should be established. Mr. President, I repeat that it is dangerous to the protectionists to establish an embargo policy. They will, by so doing, become iconoclasts and batter down the walls of their own economic superstructure.

When diverted I was saying that Germany, because of her chaotic industrial condition, is not in a position to compete with the United States in many of the products which we produce. There was handed to me a few moments ago a supplement to Commerce Reports, May 8, 1922, by Mr. Herring, commercial attaché of the German Embassy at Berlin, with an introduction by Mr. Klein, Director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, and in briefly discussing the situation in Germany the writer says:

> It would seem, however, that the inevitable saturation point is now approaching, and that continued note issues—
> Speaking of the inflation and the issue of paper money—
> and increases in the floating debt can not indefinitely postpone the operation of economic law. The steady decline in the mark's internal purchasing power during the last two years is highly significant, since it results in continuous wage demands and the necessity for greater income among all classes, with far-reaching effects on production costs.

Of course those acquainted with economics and with the function of money know that prosperity does not come by setting printing presses to work. Russia and Austria have pursued that course. Now a dollar will purchase more than a million Russian rubles. As the Russian currency was inflated the evils that besieged the country increased. Production is the basis of prosperity. A balloon currency will not vitalize industry or add to the wealth of a nation.

Reading further from page 7 of this publication:

> As experience has shown at home and elsewhere since the armistice the real difficulties of industry, and thus of labor, begin with the period of deflation, which has not yet commenced in Germany.

This morning's paper and yesterday's dispatches indicate that Germany has reached an agreement, or has promised that there would be a balancing of the budget, and that we may expect that the height of inflation has been reached and that the period of deflation will now be entered upon and be continued until Germany's circulation of paper currency shall not exceed the annual revenues of the German Government. I continue reading from this publication:

> The continuous rise in wages, the increase in coal and metal prices, heavy advances in freight rates with others in prospect, and the half-compulsory furnishing of a certain proportion of export credits to the Government for reparations payments have all combined to bring about new high levels in German manufacturing costs. So long as the mark continues at its present low value there will probably be a reasonably safe margin of production cost, which will enable German manufacturers to dispose of the great quantity of goods which they must export if raw materials are still to be imported and German industry kept going.

All of which shows that Germany's situation is such as to preclude the thought of her becoming at the present time, and in her present situation, a formidable competitor of the United States in any considerable number of commodities.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator just made a statement which interested me very much, and I would like a little fuller explanation of his views upon it. His statement was that the peak of inflation in Germany had probably been reached, and that we would now see a period of deflation. I want to ask the Senator if he thinks that Germany can ever redeem her outstanding paper with gold at 24 cents per mark? Does the Senator think that that is within the line of a possibility, even?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, one assumes a dangerous rôle when he becomes a political prophet or an industrial or economic prophet; yet I am inclined to think that the Senator's question almost answers itself. It would seem that from all human evidences Germany will be compelled to repudiate her internal indebtedness——

Mr. SMOOT. Or tax it out of existence.

Mr. KING. Yes; or tax it out of existence. Germany will probably adopt, in part at least, Soviet Russia's policy and call in a considerable part of her paper money, issuing notes of lower face value in lieu thereof. Russia attempted to call in, for instance, a million-dollar ruble note and issued in lieu thereof a thousand or a ten thousand ruble note. Germany will be compelled to inaugurate a drastic system of taxation and probably cancel or repudiate much, if not all, of her internal indebtedness.

Already we are advised that Germany is retrenching, enforcing economies in the administration of the Government, denying to municipalities Federal aid which has heretofore been granted; transportation rates have been increased and many reforms inaugurated calculated to bring Germany back to the paths of safety. It seems clear under these conditions that the peak of inflation has been reached and a complete right-about-face must be made by the Government.

Germany is seeking to obtain a loan to meet her reparation payments. She can have no financial standing among nations who have power to extend credits unless she balances her budget, retraces her steps, and abandons the foolish, unsound, and destructive policies which have guided her since the armistice. To bring about needed reform will undoubtedly produce a serious situation in Germany. There will possibly be political troubles, possibly upheavals, more or less serious, there will be industrial and economic confusion and great distress and suffering will be experienced by the people, but the deflation policy will be followed or Germany will go "upon the rocks."

A few days ago I called attention to the statement emanating from the Department of Commerce to the effect that on the first of last month wages had been increased in Germany 40 per cent, and transportation charges had been increased in like manner. The publication also stated that in all branches of trade and industry and in all parts of the Republic prices were advanced. The report from which I have just read fortifies the statement which I formerly presented to the Senate.

When I was diverted by the questions of the Senator from New Jersey, I was directing attention to some of the effects of the 7-cent per pound specific as found in this bill, and I was calling attention to paragraph 26, and I stated that indigo, sulphur black, and other sulphur products were examples of the injustice that would result from the specific duty upon products which were cheap, measured by the specific duty upon products the prices of which were high. Sulphur black is to-day being sold in the United States at substantially 16 to 20 cents a pound. More indigo and sulphur black are consumed in this country than any other two dyes, and no doubt the cost of manufacture of those two dyes is almost as low as in any country in the world.

It is of interest to know that the coal-tar medicinals, many of which are sold by the ounce, and the domestic prices of which are several dollars per pound, are provided for at the same specific rate of 7 cents per pound as the cheaper coal-tar dyes. The specific rate of 7 cents per pound alone affords a protection of considerable magnitude for these cheap dyes, and there is limited protection to these coal-tar medicinals selling by the ounce at prices from 60 cents to several dollars per pound.

No doubt the coal-tar finished products provided for in paragraph 26 should be divided into two or more different classes, as I suggested that there should be a classification of the products in paragraph 25, each class protected at a rate more clearly in accord with the differences in costs of production here and abroad.

I have no hope that this suggestion which I have made will be carried out, but I again submit that in the interest of justice and fairness there ought to be a classification of the rates fixed in paragraph 25 and in paragraph 26, at least two or three classifications, so that the same specific duty should not apply to all of the products in those two paragraphs.

The Senator from New Jersey referred to the "smallness" of our dye industry, and the inference was that the duties in the past were too low. The fact is that we have had duties upon dyes for many years. The act of June 30, 1864, provided a duty of 35 per cent ad valorem on the aniline dyes and $1 per pound specific. July 14, 1870, a duty was fixed of 35 per cent ad valorem and 50 cents per pound specific; but crude aniline oil was free, as were also picric acid and nitropicric acid.

I need not call attention to the fact, because all will remember it, that the price of dyes then was much greater than now. Because of the remarkable developments in this country and in the world, prices went down in many products since 1864 and 1870, and that is true of dyes.

In the tariff act of February 8, 1875, rates were fixed the same as in 1870, with the addition of nitrobenzol, which was given 10 cents per pound, and alizarin was made free. In 1883 coal-tar dyes bore a 35 per cent rate and alizarin, natural or artificial, was free, indigo and artificial indigo free, aniline oils and salts free.

In the act of October 1, 1890, the rates were the same as in the act of 1883, with dyes known commercially as alizarin yellow, alizarin orange, alizarin green, alizarin blue, alizarin brown, and alizarin black, which were added to the free list.

In the act of August 27, 1894, there was provided a 25 per cent ad valorem rate upon coal-tar dyes, but alizarin and indigo were free; alizarin dyes were free, as were also aniline oil and salts.

The act of July 24, 1897, provided a duty of 30 per cent ad valorem upon coal-tar dyes. Alizarin and alizarin dyes were free, anthracene dyes were free, indigo was free, and aniline oils and salts were likewise made free.

The act of August 5, 1909, gave substantially the same rates as the act of 1897.

The act of October 3, 1913, provided a duty of 30 per cent ad valorem on coal-tar dyes. Alizarin and alizarin dyes were free; anthracene dyes were free, as were also indigo and indigo dyes, aniline oil and salts, and a number of other products.

The act of September 8, 1916, carried a duty of 30 per cent ad valorem and 5 cents per pound on coal-tar dyes; indigo and indigo dyes, 30 per cent; alizarin and alizarin dyes, 30 per cent; anthracene dyes, 30 per cent; aniline oil and salts and a number of phenol compounds carried 15 per cent ad valorem and 2½ cents specific. Generally speaking, the intermediates carried a duty of 15 per cent ad valorem and 2½ cents specific.

Mr. President, under the act of 1890, which carried high rates, we imported 563,872 pounds of dyes for that year, but we produced nearly 4,000,000 pounds of finished products. So that our production was greater than our imports in 1890.

Mr. SMOOT. In 1880 the only manufacturers of dyes in this country were those who manufactured from intermediates imported from Germany.

Mr. KING. That is true.

Mr. SMOOT. All they did in the world was to import the intermediates and mix them in a vat and sell them as American-made dyes.

Mr. KING. It had been the policy to admit intermediates free. That was desired by the American producers and, as my colleague says, we imported the intermediates and produced from those intermediates 4,000,000 pounds of finished product.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; that is right. Then, in 1909, when some of us tried to establish a dye industry in the United States and started with a small ad valorem duty of 10 per cent, the western manufacturers of the country and the leather manufacturers and the cotton manufacturers were up in arms and fought it from beginning to end. The Senate passed a bill imposing a duty upon intermediates with a view of establishing the industry in the United States, knowing that they could not have any permanent dye industry in the United States until they got their intermediates, because they were dependent upon them. But when the bill went into conference, even that 10 per cent went out and the intermediates went back on the free list in the tariff act of 1909, as they always had been.

Mr. KING. I agree with my colleague. The manufacturers of dyes in the United States preferred to import their intermediates and to manufacture the finished products, so intermediates were placed upon the free list.

I want to make one observation at this point. Some people get the idea that it is calamity for us to import anything into the United States. Do they forget that for the importations from Germany there were exportations from the United States to Germany? Germany purchased millions of pounds of the beef products of the farms and the ranches of the United States. Germany furnished a market for our surplus products because we had the good sense to purchase some of Germany's surplus products. But some of our Republican friends conceive it to be evidence of impending national destruction for us to trade with any nation; that to point to the fact that we imported something from Germany or from England or from Canada is a badge of dishonor to be placed upon the brow of the Nation. That, Mr. President, is such an ignoble, antiquated, and antediluvian view that it is to me abhorrent.

Of course, we imported some intermediates from Germany, but we paid for our intermediates by sending abroad our surplus products. We found in Europe markets for billions of American products, and Europe found in the United States a market for many of her products. I wonder if Americans objected when Germany, Holland, Belgium, and France were building railroads across this country, uniting the Atlantic and the Pacific? Germany and Holland aided in building the Northern Pacific; they furnished money for railroads and for many of the industries of the United States. We were willing to take her money, willing that she should make investments in the United States. We believed in the principle of fellowship.

But now the tariff bloc and other troglodytes emphasize the view that we must cut off all trade with all nations, and that we must by tariff walls make it impossible for imports to come into the United States. I do not include in that classification, of course, all Republicans.

Mr. President, the fact is that we were producing a considerable poundage of dyes, as I have indicated, in 1880—4,000,000 pounds. We preferred to divert our capital into other industries, or, doubtless, we would have prosecuted with the growth of the coke-oven industry in the United States the development of the dye industry. But no country or no community develops in a day or in a year or in a given period all industries which the country or the community may have the power to create. Capital seeks investment usually where it can get the largest returns. For many years we were building railroads, and billions of dollars went into the railroads, steam and electric. When, because of reasons which I shall not enumerate, railroading was unprofitable and railroad investments were precarious capital sought other outlets. Now it is almost impossible to get money to invest in railroads.

The dye industry became profitable, and money was available for the development of the dye industry. Whenever any industry gives evidence that it will be profitable capital will seek investment therein.

In 1916 the Hill dye-tariff bill was passed. A committee of the leading chemists of the United States met and prepared a letter which was submitted to Mr. Hill, a member of the Ways and Means Committee of the House. That letter is so illuminating and discusses so clearly the situation that I shall tax the patience of the Senate in calling attention to it.

It must be borne in mind that there was a feeling throughout the United States following the war that we should have a dye industry. The war had shut off the importation of dyes from Germany, and it was found that our domestic production was inadequate for domestic needs. We had been consuming from 35,000,000 to 40,000,000 pounds of dyes per annum during 1912, 1913, and 1914. Our production was approximately three or four million pounds. Therefore it was deemed important by dye men and by the chemists who represented them and by the best chemical thought of the United States that there should be some modification of existing law.

A committee was appointed. The chairman of that committee was Dr. Bernhard C. Hesse, to whom I have referred and who was one of the ablest chemists in the United States. The other members of the committee were Mr. J. B. F. Herreshoff, I. F. Stone, J. Merritt Matthews, H. A. Metz, D. W. Jayne, and Allen Rogers. All of them, as I understand, were either engaged in the manufacture of dyes or in the manufacture of chemicals. They were familiar with the chemical industry, with the difficulties, if any, which the United States experienced, and with the possible competition from abroad. After a thorough investigation, weighing all the evidence, pro and con, they submitted this letter as the basis for legislation which they asked and which they regarded as necessary to the establishment in a dependable way of the permanent dye industry in the United States. I quote from their letter, as follows:

NEW YORK, January 7, 1916.

Hon. E. J. HILL,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

SIR: H. R. 702 is in part based upon the report of the chemicals and dyestuffs committee to the New York section of the American Chemical Society appearing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for December 10, 1914, copy of which is hereto attached.

The undersigned constituting the complete membership of seven of that committee herewith submit at your request their justification of—

(1) The rates proposed in that report and by you incorporated into H. R. 702; and

(2) Their expectation that as a result of such duties a complete, self-contained, and independent coal-tar chemical and dye industry will eventually result in the United States.

The professional activities of these seven men and the industrial occupations represented by them on this committee are as follows:

(1) Manufacture of heavy chemicals.
(2) American coal-tar dye producers.
(3) Textile interests.
(4) Importers of coal-tar dyes.
(5) American producers of crude coal-tar products.
(6) Leather and tanning interests.
(7) Chemical expert in coal-tar dyes.

So it will be seen that this committee of seven men represented the entire coal-tar chemical industry. Representing this great industry, they had consulted together, with a view to determining the rate which would be adequate for the protection of any chemical or coal-tar industry in the United States. They then proceed:

In 1882 this country possessed a coal-tar dye industry that promised to grow into something worth while. There was then a duty of 35 per cent ad valorem and 50 cents per pound specific. When this specific duty was removed in 1883, whatever we then had of a coal-tar dye industry languished and has since been practically without effect. A specific duty has since then not been levied.

In 1908 two of the largest American coal-tar dye plants then in existence (Schoellkopf, Hartford & Hanna Co., of Buffalo, and Heller & Merz Co., of Newark, N. J.), submitted to the Committee on Ways and Means under date of November 9, 1908, at the hearing of November 11, 1908 (pp. 128–130, vol. 1, of the official record of those hearings), a detailed statement as to the added protection they would require in order to compete successfully in this market against European-made dyes, but themselves using European-made intermediates.

I shall put the entire letter in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPENCER in the chair). In the absence of objection, the letter to which the Senator from Utah refers will be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK, January 7, 1916.

Hon. E. J. HILL,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

SIR: H. R. 702 is, in part, based upon the report of the chemicals and dyestuffs' committee to the New York section of the American Chemical Society appearing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for December 10, 1914, copy of which is hereto attached.

The undersigned, constituting the complete membership of seven of that committee, herewith submit, at your request, their justification of—

(1) The rates proposed in that report and by you incorporated into H. R. 702, and

(2) Their expectation that as a result of such duties a complete, self-contained, and independent coal-tar chemical and dye industry will eventually result in the United States.

The professional activities of these seven men and the industrial occupations represented by them on this committee are as follows:

(1) Manufacture of heavy chemicals.
(2) American coal-tar dye producers.
(3) Textile interests.
(4) Importers of coal-tar dyes.
(5) American producers of crude and coal-tar products.
(6) Leather and tanning interests.
(7) Chemical expert in coal-tar dyes.

In 1882 this country possessed a coal-tar dye industry that promised to grow into something worth while. There was then a duty of 35 per cent ad valorem and 50 cents per pound specific. When this specific duty was removed in 1883, whatever we then had of a coal-tar dye industry languished and has since been practically without effect. A specific duty has since then not been levied.

In 1908 two of the largest American coal-tar dye plants then in existence (Schoellkopf, Hartford & Hanna Co., of Buffalo, and Heller & Merz Co., of Newark, N. J.), submitted to the Committee on Ways and Means under date of November 9, 1908, at the hearing of November 11, 1908 (pp. 128–130, vol. 1, of the official record of those hearings), a detailed statement as to the added protection they would require in order to compete successfully in this market against European-made dyes, but themselves using European-made intermediates. At the same time and place they also showed that the corresponding materials cost for the same finished dyes per pound in Germany was 10.57 cents.

Reverting now to the tariff in effect in 1882, this committee is dependably informed that the then average import value of the great bulk—that is, from two-thirds to three-fourths of all the European-made coal-tar dyes entering this country—was a little over $1 per pound, and this notwithstanding the statement of from 50 cents to 60 cents made by Mr. John Campbell under date of July 26, 1882, at pages 154–156, volume 1, of the Report of the Tariff Commission of 1882. If this committee's information of the $1 figure be correct, then the specific duty then in effect was essentially one-half of the fair average import value of the bulk of the dyes reaching this country from Europe.

This committee was further dependably informed that in 1914, before the outbreak of hostilities, the fair average import value of the bulk—that is, from two-thirds to three-fourths—of all the dyes reaching this country from Europe is 15 cents.

If, therefore, the specific duty of 7½ cents be now added to the prevailing ad valorem of 30 per cent, the tariff conditions in 1882, under which we did have something in the way of coal-tar dye industry, would be substantially reproduced; and under those conditions it is not unreasonable to expect that the industry would again flourish in this country.

In all of the tariff legislation heretofore enacted some of the coal-tar dyes were put upon the free list; also the intermediates have been more or less—principally more—upon the free list. In other words, the protection afforded to the coal-tar dye industry has never been such as to cover the entire industry but only segregated parts thereof. Each and all of these tariff enactments failed to provide for a coordinated protection of the making of intermediates and of the production of the finished dyes therefrom all in this country.

Therefore this committee recommended that this isolated and "spotty" protection be removed and all dyestuffs, by whatever name known, and produced in whole or in part from materials obtained or obtainable from coal tar, should be treated alike for tariff purposes; all should be taxed 30 per cent ad valorem plus 7½ cents per pound specific.

In general, the German 1913 export price of intermediates is about one-half that of finished dyes. Therefore, this committee compensated the specific on finished dyes to the intermediates by adding a specific duty of 3.75 cents per pound on all intermediates. This committee suggested a 15 per cent ad valorem duty on intermediates as against 30 per cent ad valorem on finished dyes, because, compared with the finished dyes, with the intermediates being made in larger units and amounts, the handling costs in manufacturing intermediates in the factory are less than the handling costs for finished dyes.

Returning now to the statement of Messrs. Schoellkopf and of Messrs. Heller and Merz above referred to, the added protection due to the there proposed increased ad valorem would amount to 1.5 cents on dyes of an average value of 15 cents entering this country. Adding this 1.5 cents to the 1.54 cents above shown gives as a total an added 3.04 cents protection per pound on dyes of the above-stated fair average import value.

As a test case of the net effect of this schedule of rates upon the production of the cheapest dyes, this committee further had the benefit of the following calculations based upon the assumptions now to be given:

The dye known as orange II is probably the type of the cheapest of the dyes that are imported into this country. It is made by assembling two intermediates known, respectively, as sulphanilic acid and betanaphthol. In general, 173 pounds of sulphanilic acid and 144 pounds of betanaphthol will yield 350 pounds of the commercial dye in its highest commercial concentration. There were four cases assumed with regard to respective import values, as follows:

Case.	Orange II.	Sulfanilic acid.	Betanaphthol.
	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.
I	8	4	6
II	8	6	8
III	12	8	9
IV	12	4	6

The calculated respective added advantages for 6, 6.5, 7, 7.5, 8, 8.5, 9, 9.5, and 10 cents specific for the dyes, and half of each for intermediates, with an ad valorem of 30 per cent and 15 per cent, respectively, in cents per pound of orange II, due to this schedule of rates, would therefore be as follows:

Case.	6 cents.	6.5 cents.	7 cents.	7.5 cents.	8 cents.	8.5 cents.	9 cents.	9.5 cents.	10 cents.
	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.
I	2.61	2.88	3.16	3.43	3.70	3.98	4.25	4.52	4.80
II	2.34	2.61	2.89	3.16	3.43	3.71	3.98	4.25	4.53
III	2.13	2.40	2.68	2.95	3.22	3.50	3.77	4.04	4.32
IV	2.62	2.99	3.17	3.44	3.71	3.99	4.26	4.53	4.18

From this tabulation it is clear that 7.5 cents is the lowest specific rate that gives a practically 8 cents added protection per pound of this cheap dye under this variety of price circumstances and combinations.

It is therefore clear that the rates that this committee suggested meet the following three conditions:

(1) Recreate the tariff conditions of 1882 to conform as nearly as possible to the altered conditions of 1914.

(2) Give the industry that makes dyes from intermediates the added assistance that in 1908 it showed to be necessary for its continuance in business.

(3) Protect the domestic intermediates maker.

There is also the added advantage to the dye-making industry that all of the coal-tar dyes are dutiable and none are free and that all intermediates are dutiable and none are free.

That the committee's assumption that 15 cents represents the fair average import value of the bulk of the dyes reaching this country in 1914 is reasonably near the truth is shown further by the average materials and labor costs given in the statement of Messrs. Schoellkopf, Hartford & Hanna Co. and of Messrs. Heller & Merz, of 1908, just referred to. The combined labor and materials costs in Germany of the 3,000,000 pounds of dyes there referred to is 12.62 cents per pound. Our present consumption of dyes is between 50,000,000 and 60,000,000 pounds per year.

In order to visualize the effect of these proposed rates upon intermediates and dyestuffs and the total protection afforded, the following table is submitted:

In 1913 the average export value out of Germany of intermediates was 10.07 cents per pound, and of finished dyes 21.53 cents per pound. Therefore these proposed rates give a total protection of 53 per cent to this average value of intermediates and of 65 per cent to this average value of finished dyes, and, furthermore, conform very closely to the tariff conditions in 1882 and satisfy the 1908 requirements of the United States dye makers mentioned, and in addition protect the entire class of coal-tar dyes and their respective intermediates and gives the prospective American intermediate maker a protection which he has hitherto never enjoyed.

This committee further believes that with this protection on the cheaper dyes, the domestic manufacture of the more expensive varieties of dyes, of pharmaceuticals, of medicines, and of explosives will follow almost as a matter of course.

In order that there may be given as little opportunity as possible for evasion of the duties contemplated to be imposed by the report of this committee, this committee now respectfully suggests to you that House bill 702 further contain a definition of what is to be a coal-tar dye for the purposes of this act, so that such things which under our present adjudications are not coal-tar dyes and are not coal-tar dye intermediates will be obliged to pay the duty of coal-tar dyes.

The materials we have in mind are the dye bases known as magenta base, Victoria blue base, Victoria green base, Bismarck brown base, auramine base, crystal violet base, methyl violet base, rhodamine base, chrysoidine base, and the like, which are imported in that condition and merely require the addition of a small amount of muriatic acid thereto to convert them into the commercial forms of dyes. In the form of bases they are neither dyes nor intermediates, and they pay 20 per cent as coal-tar preparations; they are not dealt in on the European markets; they have no fixed market value; the importation value into the United States can be whatever the exporter chooses. In this connection it will be necessary to look into the language employed by the court in the decision reported under Treasury decision 34460, in volume 26, for January to June, 1914, and 5 Customs Court of Appeals.

Furthermore, the language used in the cases cited in Treasury Decision 28003 with regard to bromonaphthalic acid should be consulted, so as to prevent evasion along the line of those products which are dye acids and need merely the addition of a small amount of soda ash to convert them into commercial dye forms. It would not do to place these rates upon coal-tar dyes and then enable foreigners to ship into this country things that are not dyes and not intermediates under our present adjudications and which merely need the addition of a negligible amount of muriatic or other acid or of soda ash or of similar material to convert them into the real dyes of our adjudications. It is obvious that if any such loophole were permitted to stand the result expected of those rates would not take place—i. e., a complete, self-contained, and independent coal-tar, chemical, and dye industry within the borders of the United States.

This committee further suggests that in placing natural indigo on the free list the wording selected be such as positively to exclude indigo not derived from vegetable sources from that free list.

From the point of view that the protective duty contemplated to be added by these proposed rates will reimpear in whole or in part in the form of a direct addition to the normal cost of dyestuffs, it is clear that those users of dyestuffs that have in whole or in part hitherto enjoyed the free list will bear the greater relative proportion of such putative increase. Whether such addition will actually take place or not this committee expresses no opinion; it merely states the maximum that can reasonably be expected in the way of increased cost to the users of dyes in this country. In other words, as we stated in our above report, namely:

It will, therefore, be necessary to determine carefully if the advantages to be gained are equal to the price to be paid.

This committee herewith unanimously reaffirms its belief that the rates proposed in its report of November, 1914, above referred to, are the lowest at which a self-contained, complete, and independent coal-tar, chemical, and dye industry can be created in this country, and which at the same time offer a legitimate incentive to legitimate capital for a legitimate effort to produce these goods in this country. Whether capital will avail itself of this advantage or not this committee expresses no opinion.

CONCLUSIONS.

As to this schedule of rates proposed—

(1) It is the probable lowest schedule that will induce complete, self-contained, and independent manufacture within the United States.

(2) It meets and very closely duplicates the tariff conditions existing in 1882, when we did have something of an industry of this kind.

(3) It meets the requirements set forth in 1908 as necessary to maintain a dye industry in this country, which dye industry then operated with foreign-made intermediates.

(4) It provides at the same time a suitable protection to the making of intermediates within the United States.

(5) It puts all dyes of coal-tar origin upon one and the same level for tariff purposes, and also puts all such intermediates upon one and the same level for tariff purposes.

(6) It gives a protection of 53 per cent on the average value of all intermediates and of 65 per cent on the average value of all finished dyes, such average values being average export values out of Germany for 1913.

Respectfully submitted.

Mr. KING. The letter contains this statement:

This committee was further dependably informed that in 1914, before the outbreak of hostilities, the fair average import value of the bulk—that is, from two-thirds to three-fourths of all the dyes reaching this country from Europe—is 15 cents.

Let me say, Mr. President, that the average price of the dyes in the United States to-day is reported by the Tariff Commission to be 83 cents—15 cents then; 83 cents now. Of course the people have to pay for this 400 or 500 or 600 per cent advance in price.

If, therefore, the specific duty of 7½ cents be now added to the prevailing ad valorem of 30 per cent, the tariff conditions in 1882, under which we did have something in the way of coal-tar dye industry, would be substantially reproduced, and under those conditions it is not unreasonable to expect that the industry would again flourish in this country.

That is to say, in 1880 we produced in the United States practically 4,000,000 pounds of coal-tar dyes, and imported only 4,000 pounds plus. We had a coal-tar dye industry in 1880 and were producing approximately 80 per cent of our consumption.

Bear in mind now that with all the experience of the past these men who were interested parties, who wanted a duty and who were giving ex parte testimony, only asked for the establishment of a permanent dye industry a duty of 30 per cent ad valorem and 7½ cents specific; and yet in the bill now before us it is proposed to grant 60 per cent ad valorem to the finished product and 50 per cent ad valorem to the intermediate; double what the industry asked as a basis for a permanent coal-tar industry in the United States.

In the same report this is what is recommended:

That the committee's assumption that 15 cents represents the fair average import value of the bulk of the dyes reaching this country in 1914 is reasonably near the truth is shown further by the average materials and labor costs given in the statement of Messrs. Schoellkopf, Hartford & Hanna Co., and of Messrs. Heller & Merz, of 1908, just referred to. The combined labor and materials costs in Germany of the 3,000,000 pounds of dyes there referred to is 12.62 cents per pound. Our present consumption of dyes is between 50,000,000 and 60,000,000 pounds per year.

Here are the conclusions of the committee. They recommend, as I have said, 30 per cent ad valorem and 7½ cents specific. Further—

(2) It meets and very closely duplicates the tariff conditions existing in 1882, when we did have something of an industry of this kind.

(3) It meets the requirements set forth in 1908 as necessary to maintain a dye industry in this country, which dye industry then operated with foreign-made intermediates.

(4) It provides at the same time a suitable protection to the making of intermediates within the United States.

(5) It puts all dyes of coal-tar origin upon one and the same level for tariff purposes and also puts all such intermediates upon one and the same level for tariff purposes.

All the members of the committee signed the letter.

A number of men who were interested in procuring a tariff testified before the committee. Doctor Matthews was asked by Judge Crisp, of the House:

Would you regard the tariff levied in this bill—

The tariff which they had asked for—to preclude importation? In other words, would it be prohibitive or would any dyestuffs come in if this tariff were levied?

Doctor Matthews answered:

It would not prohibit importations, because it would take quite a number of years for any industry in this country to arrive at the condition that the German dyestuff industry has arrived at. During that time there would be a good demand for many dyestuffs which would not be made in this country.

I hope Senators appreciate the significance of that. Doctor Matthews contends, in effect, that with that tariff we could build up the dye industry, notwithstanding any possible competition from Germany or elsewhere. Then he was asked this question:

But if this country could produce the dyestuffs, or whenever this country does produce the dyestuffs, would or would not the tariff levied in this bill prohibit importation?

To that question Doctor Matthews replied:

I would not say that it would prohibit importations, but it would give the foreigners a run for their money. It would furnish a good competitive basis to work on.

There is an honest tariff man. He wants a tariff bill that furnishes competition. Those who are back of the bill before us want a tariff law that will prohibit competition. The dye men who were urging the bill known as the Hill bill in 1916 were willing to have legitimate and reasonable competition, and they were satisfied with a tariff of 30 per cent ad valorem and 7½ cents specific, and contended that they could meet the competition of the world and could build up a dependable, permanent coal-tar dye industry in the United States. Similar testimony was given by other witnesses, Mr. President, but I wish to call attention to the testimony of another of the large dye manufacturers of the United States. Before reading his testimony, however, I direct attention to what Professor Herty says. He was asked how long it would take with that tariff to enable the United States to occupy a commanding place as a producer of dyes, and he said:

Five or six years will be enough. I think, to get the majority of our manufacturers in good shape where we can not only hold our own but more than hold our own with the Germans. I can not say that for all; some would get in shape earlier and some would take longer.

In other words, one of the ablest representatives of the dye and chemical industry in the United States, if not in the world, was asking for a tariff of but 30 per cent ad valorem and 7½ cents specific, declaring that within a short time, as to some of the producers they would be able to compete with Germany and the world, but that in the aggregate five years would be all that would be required.

Mr. Schoellkopf, the president of the Schoellkopf Aniline & Chemical Works, Buffalo, N. Y., testified. Let me add that that company has been swallowed up by the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation, one of the great trusts of the United States, with a capital of nearly $300,000,000, and, of course, that corporation has been here demanding these prohibitive tariffs and embargoes, notwithstanding it has developed by the accretions which have been brought to it until it now comprises within its sweeping grasp scores of corporations, with an aggregate capital of nearly $300,000,000.

Mr. Schoellkopf testified:

Under normal conditions the existing rates are entirely inadequate—

Those were the rates that preceded this bill—to develop a self-contained coal-tar industry.

Then he says:

My own firm has continually been adding new products to its line, but notwithstanding this fact, our output just before the war was continually declining.

Then he was asked this question:

The CHAIRMAN. You are going to prepare to make about 14,000,000 pounds when you get this plant?

He was then constructing a plant.

Mr. SCHOELLKOPF. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. If this bill becomes a law, how much larger will you make your plant?

Mr. SCHOELLKOPF. We will proceed at once to double it, as I first stated.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you would make about 28,000,000 pounds?

Per annum, of course.

The answer was:

Yes.

Let me say that Doctor Beckers, who was connected with another dye plant, had stated that his plant would produce approximately the same amount; so that the two plants, the Beckers plant and the Schoellkopf plant, both of which have been absorbed by the Chemical Trust, would produce approximately fifty to sixty million pounds per annum, which would be the total domestic consumption in the United States at that time and any year prior thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. So, if this bill becomes a law, you would make about 50 per cent of all we need in this country?

Mr. SCHOELLKOPF. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, do you think, being already in the business and having a larger share of it now among the Americans, that if this bill becomes a law you will increase so that you will make at once 50 per cent? Do you think many people will come in and compete with an old-established firm like your own under those conditions?

Mr. SCHOELLKOPF. I think so. There are three in the business now. Why shouldn't they enlarge?

Doctor Beckers testified:

At any rate, there is no doubt that this bill will not create a so-called hothouse industry. We will have a healthy industry.

The contention was that if they gave a rate of 30 per cent ad valorem and 7½ cents specific it might build up a hothouse plant industry. He said, "No; it will be healthy"; and he contended, as did Mr. Schoellkopf—two of the greatest dye producers in the United States—that with that tariff they would build up a permanent, healthy dye industry in the United States.

The chairman asked:

How long have you been in the dyestuff industry in this country, Doctor Beckers?

Doctor BECKERS. I have been in this country for 18 years.

The CHAIRMAN. And have you been manufacturing dyestuffs in this country for 13 years?

Doctor BECKERS. No, sir. I have been with a German concern eight or nine years, and I have been in business now four years on my own account.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean this Beckers Aniline & Chemicals Works have been four years in business?

Doctor BECKERS. Yes, sir; the company has been in existence now four years, starting in 1912.

Then, further on, he says:

I have figured that at present I am making about 5 per cent of the whole consumption of dyestuffs in this country with my present plant.

He had only been in business four years—

But as soon as I have the assurance of the Government—

With respect to the passage of this bill—

that we will be protected against this terrible competition from abroad——

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). But is it not a fact that if this bill were passed you would quadruple your plant and output?

Doctor BECKERS (continuing). I expect to make ten times as much dyestuffs as now.

The CHAIRMAN. Ten times as much?

Doctor BECKERS. Yes, sir; and instead of making 5 per cent I expect to make 50 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. That being so, then you and Mr. Schoellkopf would make the entire consumption—the whole 100 per cent?

Doctor BECKERS. Well, I do not know how much he would make.

The CHAIRMAN. He said he would make 60 per cent if this bill were passed.

Doctor BECKERS. I do not know about that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. If this bill were passed and became a law, and if you expect to make 50 per cent of the entire consumption, and another large manufacturer expects to make 50 per cent of the entire consumption, are we not justified in being sort of afraid that you two gentlemen would be tempted after the war to get together and have some sort of a gentlemen's agreement? Would not you two get together and have a sort of dinner and make a gentlemen's agreement, and establish the prices which these textile fellows will have to pay for your products?

Doctor BECKERS. Gentlemen, I tell you——

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). Would you not be tempted to do that?

He does not answer it. He states this:

It is now 5 per cent, and if I increased it ten times it would be 50 per cent of the present entire consumption; but I do not know whether I could make 50 per cent of the entire consumption if this bill were passed, because I feel that as soon as the bill is enacted into law a great many concerns will go into that business, giving our concerns strong competition.

Mr. President, when Congress was legislating for the establishment of a permanent dye industry in the United States, at a time when we were under whip and spur, and the hysterical demand was made that we have a self-contained dye industry, the dye men and the chemical men got together and agreed that a tariff of 30 per cent ad valorem, 7½ cents specific, was all that was required, and two of them said that under that tariff they would make 100 per cent of all the dyes that were consumed in the United States.

Now, when those two corporations have been swallowed up by the great Allied Chemical & Dye Co., with a capital stock of substantially $300,000,000, one branch of which was declared to be a trust several years ago, and is making not less than 40 per cent of the domestic production of the United States, and the Du Pont Co., with a capital of $255,000,000, is making between 15 and 25 per cent of the domestic production, we are asked to give a rate of 60 per cent ad valorem and 7 cents specific. After we have built an industry so strong that it produced 88,000,000 pounds of dyes two years ago and could now manufacture, with the plants already constructed, perhaps double that amount, we are asked to double the ad valorem rates. And this demand is made notwithstanding the industry has been established and is competent to furnish dyes not only for the United States but for the world, and notwithstanding the fact that the United States produces more crudes and intermediates than all other countries in the world put together. We have the resources and we have the capital; we have perhaps the best dye plants in the world, and yet, at the demand of these huge trusts, we propose to increase the rates and grant an embargo.

Mr. President, the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation absorbed the Barrett Co., the Semet-Solvay Co., and a large number of other companies; and one company alone paid sufficient dividends—one of its smaller companies—to constitute in that year a large dividend upon the entire capital stock of this aggregated corporation.

I ask permission to put into the RECORD the names of the constituent companies of the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

ALLIED CHEMICAL & DYE CORPORATION.

Solvay Process Co.: Solvay Colliery Co., By-Products Coke Corporation.

Semet-Solvay Co.: By-products Coke Corporation.

National Aniline & Chemical Co.: Schoellkopf Aniline & Chemical Works, W. Becker's Aniline & Chemical Works, Benzol Products Co., Standard Aniline Products (Inc.), Century Color Corporation.

Barrett Co.: With 40 subsidiary coal-tar chemical plants in 19 States, including large aniline product plant at Shady Side, N. J.

General Chemical Co.: Virginia Mining Co., Western Chemical Co., General Lighterage Co., Nichols Chemical Co., and subsidiary aniline products plants at Marcus Hook and Easton, Pa.

Mr. KING. I also ask permission to put in the RECORD the corporations constituting the Du Pont de Nemours Corporation, with a capital stock of more than $255,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

E. I. du Pont De Nemours & Co.: Du Pont Chemical Co., Du Pont Fabrikoid Co., E. I. du Pont de Nemours Powder Co., Flint Varnish & Color Works, Bridgeport Wood Finishing Co., Du Pont Engineering Co., Cawley, Clark & Co., New England Oil, Paint & Varnish Co., Arlington Co., E. I. du Pont de Nemours Export Co., Harrison Bros. Co., Becton Chemical Co.

The E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. also has a dominating interest in the General Motors Corporation with assets which in 1921 were reported to be $604,806,868, and which has subsidiary corporations as follows:

Chevrolet Motor Car Co., Buick Motor Car Co., Cadillac Motor Car Co., Oakland Motor Car Co., Olds Motor Car Co., Sheridan Motor Car Co., Scripps-Booth Corporation, Samson Tractor Co., Dayton Wright Co., National Plate Glass Co., Fisher Body Corporation, Dayton Wright Co., Delco Light Co., Hyatt Roller Bearing Co., Champion Ignition Co., General Leather Co., and General Motor Acceptance Corporation.

Mr. KING. That company, by the way, has absorbed some 10 or 15 or 20 corporations which had been paying large dividends. Two of the corporations were adjudged several years ago to constitute a trust and they were dissolved and the stock had to be parted with, but the present corporations forming auxiliaries to this parent organization have interests and assets of a value of more than $255,000,000.

I find in the Commercial and Financial Chronicle of Saturday, May 27, 1922, the following advertisement of stock representation:

E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co.
Common stock (par value $100)—

And so forth.

(being part of the outstanding $63,378,300 common stock in the hands of the public.)

* * * * * * *

Business: The company and its predecessors have been engaged in the manufacture of explosives for both commercial and military purposes since 1802. Company also manufactures chemicals, paints, varnishes, dyes, artificial leather, pyralin, and artificial silk.

An examination of the various corporations that are embraced within this huge colossus will show that a great many activities are carried on by this gigantic organization.

Under the head of "General Motors Holdings," it is said:

The Du Pont Co. owns 36.25 per cent, or 7,628,137 shares of the common stock of General Motors Corporation, representing an asset value at present market quotations of over $110,000,000.

That is in addition to the $255,000,000 which constitute a part of the chemical activities of this great corporation. When you are determining whether a corporation exercises monopolistic control you are permitted to show its connections, its interlocking relations with other corporations, because there is a potential power for monopolistic control that will exist, and which may be applied indirectly, if not directly, in the interest of the establishment and the maintenance of a monopoly.

For the past 11 years the company's average annual income applied to the average common stock outstanding has amounted to 54.33 per cent.

The annual income was 54.33 per cent.

Net receipts from commercial business as distinguished from military business for these 11 years have averaged $7,500,000 annually, or nearly 12 per cent on the present outstanding common stock. It should be noted that a large portion of the profits realized from war business has been reinvested in income-producing industries.

I charge, Mr. President, that this great corporation, as well as the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation, have amortized the plants which they constructed during the war out of their earnings, in addition to paying the enormous dividends, stock and cash, which Moody's Manual, this paper, and other reputable papers of the United States have disclosed.

Since incorporation in 1915—

That is, the E. I. du Pont de Nemours Co., which, as I understand, took over many of these companies—the company has paid dividends on the common stock without interruption, averaging 35.86 per cent per share annually, in cash or securities.

Net assets: According to the balance sheet of December 31, 1921, net assets (including good will, etc.) applicable to common stock, amounted to $204 per share. Reckoning securities owned at market value instead of cost, these assets would be $243 per share. Company's surplus, December 31, 1921, was $66,080,659. Cash in bank March 31, 1922, was $18,500,000.

These two great corporations, as I have indicated, produce between 55 and 65 per cent of all the dyes that are manufactured in the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I would like to inquire of the Senator what the object of that advertisement was. What were they trying to sell?

Mr. KING. This is signed by Dominick & Dominick, New York; Laird & Co., Wilmington; Gillespie, Meeds & Co., New York and Wilmington. I am not quite able to answer the question intelligently. It reads:

All of this stock having been sold, this advertisement appears as a matter of record.

Two million shares of stock had been sold, whether out of the treasury or by the stock brokers I am not able to state.

Mr. NORRIS. What was the excuse, then, for the advertisement?

Mr. KING. I am not able to answer the question of the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. If they did not have anything to sell——

Mr. KING. It says, "all of the stock having been sold, this advertisement appears as a matter of record."

Mr. NORRIS. They are advertising the stock, apparently, after it was sold.

Mr. KING. Under that heading appears this:

Two million dollar E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. common stock (par value $100) (being part of the outstanding $63,378,300 common stock in the hands of the public).

I would deduce from reading that that either the company or these brokers had sold $2,000,000 worth of stock, and there may be some law which requires a recordation or an advertisement of a transaction of that character. I will say to the Senator, however, that Moody's Manual and other reputable books which I have consulted show that the dividends and the capital stock, and so forth, are in harmony with the statements contained in this advertisement.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not questioning the statements. I have no doubt they are true. I do not suppose a company of that kind would set forth those figures if they were not true; but, at the same time, they have not anything for sale, and yet I suppose that is a very large advertisement, is it not, covering a page?

Mr. KING. One-half of a page.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator know whether the advertisement appeared in other magazines?

Mr. KING. I do not. I read this paper occasionally, and I procured a copy of it this morning.

Mr. NORRIS. What is the title of it?

Mr. KING. The Commercial and Financial Chronicle.

Mr. NORRIS. There have been instances, I think, where some of these great trusts have had so much money that, under the law, a good deal of it could be taken for taxes when it ran up to such a large income, and they utilized a good deal of it to advertise in papers, when they had nothing to sell, because, as a matter of fact, they would have to pay only about a third of the cost of the advertisement. The balance would come out of the Treasury of the United States, or otherwise they would have been compelled to pay it as taxes into the Treasury. It is claimed sometimes, I suppose always without foundation, that such advertisements are inserted in magazines and papers for the purpose of perhaps influencing the editorial pages of the magazines or papers.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not care to speculate as to the reason for that advertisement, but I am calling attention to the fact that the two great organizations which have been most powerful in urging these rates are the Du Pont Co. and the Allied Chemical Co.—the Du Pont Co., with a capital stock of $255,000,000 plus $110,000,000 constituting its holdings in the General Motors Co., and the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation, having a capital stock of substantially $300,000,000. These are the infant industries which are mewling here upon the doorstep of the Capitol asking to be taken in and fed from a bottle by the Republicans upon the other side of the aisle. They are so weak that they can not be protected unless they secure an embargo and the prohibitive tariff rates which appear in paragraphs 25 and 26 of this bill.

I might say, in view of the statement made by the Senator from Nebraska, that there was a suit pending a short time ago in which it was revealed that the income of this organization was very great and efforts were made to avoid paying $5,000,000 of taxes to the Government by a few of the stockholders, upon the ground that the stock dividend, though it was the equivalent of cash, was not subject to Federal taxation.

Mr. NORRIS. Would it not be true, under the law, that the very advertisement the Senator has read would be charged up as expenses, and that the amount of taxes they would have to pay would be reduced just that much?

Mr. KING. I think that is true.

Mr. NORRIS. So that, as a matter of fact, this glowing advertisement, in effect, is paid for out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. KING. I repeat, those two corporations, those powerful organizations, have been the great protagonists back of this bill. They and the Dye Institute, which is an organization formed by the dye manufacturers in violation of the law, in violation of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Hardwood Lumber Co. case, have carried on a persistent and subtle campaign for this embargo for years.

The senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] rose in his place here some time ago and called attention to the fact that the dye manufacturers formed the Dye Institute, and they spent for legislative work in Washington—that is, lobbying—$80,000 in one year, or within a limited period. I may not be accurate as to the time, but it was from the time the dye embargo bill was introduced in the House until the time the Senator from New Hampshire made his statement.

Mr. SMOOT. Less than a year.

Mr. KING. Less than a year, my colleague advises me.

Mr. Choate received a large sum for his lobbying here. A former Member of Congress received $25,000 for drawing the bill which was introduced in the House of Representatives. They have kept their agents and lobbyists here from that time until the present. They have been here by the scores, hounding Representatives and Senators, filling the lobbies of the Capitol, and pursuing members of the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Ways and Means at every hearing, and after the hearings were closed they remained, and are still in Washington intercepting Senators, and trying to thrust themselves into the secret councils of the committee when they were in executive session, in order that they may secure legislation riveting upon the country an embargo, and giving monopolistic control of the dye industry to certain domestic dye producers. I will put into the RECORD, before this debate closes, the names of the lobbyists who have been here and are here now. The hearings are over. We are debating the bill, but the lobbyists will not go home. They like this atmosphere of Washington.

Mr. NORRIS. Until morning?

Mr. KING. No; not to-morrow or day after to-morrow. They are going to stop here until the committee shall finally report this bill back from conference, and they would bound the conferees, if the conferees would permit it, but of course they will not; but they will dog their footsteps, anyway, for the purpose of coercing them into granting the exactions which these predatory interests demand at the hands of the American people.

Let me call attention to another insidious organization, the Chemical Foundation. Mr. Garvan conceived the idea, so it is said by Mr. Choate, of taking from the Germans more than 4,500 patents and a large number of trade-marks and copyrights which had been registered in the United States. Americans had obtained patents in Germany, but neither during the war nor since did Germany seek to confiscate them. The course of this Government is not so just and honorable in the matter of dealing with patents. We have professed adherence to the highest principles of international comity and justice. In the days of Washington the United States contended for the sanctity of the property of enemy aliens and denied the right of confiscation. Alexander Hamilton in one of his most brilliant speeches contended for the immunity of private property from seizure by belligerents, and he and Washington, because of their devotion to international morality, compelled the American Government to pay Britishers and Tories for property which had been confiscated during the war by some of the States, or Colonies, as they were called.

I can not approve of the course of the Government in selling these patents and trade-marks, in violation of international law, if not treaties, and the wrongfulness of this course becomes more apparent when it is known that the sale was made by officials of the Government to a corporation which they organized and for a wholly inadequate consideration.

Mr. Garvan was Alien Property Custodian and became president of the Chemical Foundation. Mr. Choate and Mr. Ramsay Hoguet were in the Alien Property Custodian's office, dollar-a-year men, and have received large fees from the Chemical Foundation.

Let me say by way of parenthesis that some of the dollar-a-year men who came down to Washington during the war were not as unselfish as they professed to be, and the facts seem to establish that some of them were not loyal to their trust or fair and honest in their relations to the United States. Some of the dollar-a-year men conceived the idea of confiscating these German patents, so they organized the Chemical Foundation, highly altruistic purposes were announced, and then transferred more than 4,000 patents to themselves or to the corporation which they organized and controlled. Mr. Choate, a dollar-a-year man, is said to have drawn the articles for the Chemical Foundation, receiving $20,000 from the corporation.

Ramsay Hoguet, a dollar-a-year man, working with Mr. Garvan in the Alien Property Custodian's office, got more than $50,000 for examining the patents and performing some legal work. They formed this corporation, confiscated those patents, and then began their work of propaganda throughout the United States for an embargo. They have expended in this propaganda, I think, between $250,000 and $400,000.

Their propaganda has been nation-wide and it has assumed many forms. Speakers have been sent into various States to argue for the embargo, and the pressure upon Congress for an embargo has been unrelenting. The dyes industry, the Chemical Foundation, the Textile Alliance, and other organizations have had their representatives in Washington for nearly two years, and they are still here lobbying for the dye monopoly. Some of the officers in the Chemical Warfare Service have given some aid in this campaign conducted by the dye interests, and the Chemical Foundation has advanced money to some of the officers of the Chemical Warfare Section for the purpose of making dye exhibits which were used as a part of the lobbying and propagandizing campaign. Every avenue that could be entered, from the women's organizations to the American Chemical Society, has been employed for the purpose of securing an embargo. And the result of this vast campaign, costing hundreds of thousands of dollars, is found in this bill. Not satisfied with a 60 per cent tariff and a specific rate of 7 cents per pound on dyes, they demand an embargo.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. Will the Senator let me offer my motion first, or does he desire to ask me a question?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Yes. I should like to ask the Senator if it is not true that the embargo was inaugurated during the last administration, and did not President Wilson and Secretary of War Baker recommend it and stand for it?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the first I heard of the demand for an embargo was when Mr. du Pont and others appeared before the committee of the House in support of what was called the Longworth bill. Mr. Wilson, so far as I know, never advocated an embargo. If Mr. Baker did, I never heard of it. But if either of them did, I can only say, as I said a moment ago when the Senator called my attention to the attitude of Mr. Wilson upon another matter, that it would not determine my course. An embargo is un-American and indefensible, no matter by whom offered.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I am familiar with the Senator's position on this question; but I am simply pointing out that, aside from the activities about which I know nothing except in the course of the general legislation and debate on it, the former administration, and particularly President Wilson, saw the effect on the conflict abroad of the German industrial power in dyes and gases and came back and urged the embargo as a necessary national policy in order to establish the industry in this country and make us independent. Whatever the motives may be of those men, I am not concerned about that.

Mr. KING. I do not want the Senator to make a speech in my time.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Very well. I simply ask the question whether it is not true that the policy of the embargo was inaugurated and advocated by the former administration, none other than the President of the United States, Mr. Wilson, and his Secretary of War, Mr. Baker?

Mr. KING. I know nothing of the advocacy of an embargo by Mr. Wilson. I shall be very much surprised if the Senator can put his hand upon any paper indicating he advocated an embargo. I doubt whether he can put his hand upon any statement made by Mr. Baker advocating an embargo. Of course, during the war there was an embargo not only upon dyes but upon many commodities. But we are not at war now.

I might say in passing that having taken these patents from the Germans and transferred them to the Chemical Foundation, and the dye manufacturers in the United States availing themselves of their provisions, no German dyes covered by these patents may be brought into the United States without the consent of the men who owned the patents, whether there was an embargo or not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is the Senator quite sure of that?

Mr. KING. I am quite sure of this proposition, that all dyes that are covered by the German patents, now claimed to be owned by the Chemical Foundation, could not be brought into the United States and sold here without their consent. Indeed this corporation charges a license fee of 10 per cent for any dyes that are brought into the United States which are not manufactured here, and which are brought in under the provisions of the emergency tariff act.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator contend that a German-manufactured dye can not be brought into this country on account of the existence of the Chemical Foundation?

Mr. KING. If the Senator had listened he would have known what I said.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I heard what the Senator said, and I was trying to confirm my understanding.

Mr. KING. I said that any dyes brought into the United States covered by those patents could only be brought here by the consent of the owners of the patents. The Senator knows that every pound of dye that is brought into the United States now covered by those patents has to pay a royalty of 10 per cent, and in addition a license must be procured from the United States to import it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Is it not true——

Mr. KING. Of course, if the Senator will pardon me a moment, there are some dyes brought in not covered by the patents, and some of the patents have expired, but I referred to dyes covered by patents. As I have heretofore stated, not only dye patents and various other patents but also trademarks and copyrights were seized and sold to the Chemical Foundation. Our courts, as I am advised, have held that trademarks connected with a patented article or commodity do not necessarily expire; that is, their protective power or right is not lost, even though the patent may expire by limitation. That is to say, suppose a certain dye or a formula, for its protection, is patented and the dye is sold under a given name, say, "The Silver Star Dye," and a trade-mark is obtained, based upon that name, for the patented dye; upon the expiration of the patent the trade-mark would not necessarily expire or lose its effectiveness as a means of protection to the company selling such dye. Accordingly, I think, though I have not examined the subject with any care, that if one of these dye patents should expire by limitation and a trade-mark has been obtained in the United States which relates to the dye, the expiration of the patent would not give the right to some firm or individual not owning the trade-mark to bring the dye into the United States and sell it under that particular trademark. It seems to me that the owner of the trade-mark would be entitled to protection of the name and be entitled to bring injunction proceedings to restrain the use of the trade-mark.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator does not contend that a trade-mark prevents the bringing in of the identical article and selling it in the United States?

Mr. KING. No; I did not mean that.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not understand what the Senator meant, then, when he said that they could not be brought in if there was a trade-mark.

Mr. KING. I attempted to convey the thought that if one has a trade-mark and has employed it in business and it possesses value, he would be protected against any person who attempted to use such trade-mark. Accordingly if a trade-mark was registered in the United States by a German, registered under the law and pursuant to treaty, and it was sold to an American, who continued its use, he would be protected in that use against the efforts of others to employ it in the sale of commodities brought from Germany, where the attempt was made to sell such a commodity or protect it under the same trade-mark, and the courts would grant injunction. For instance, if there is a patent on the formula used in the manufacture of bromo seltzer and a trade-mark has been taken out calling such product the Rising Sun Bromo Seltzer, the owner of such trade-mark would be protected in its use even after the expiration of the patent. And if bromo seltzer were imported and an attempt made to sell it under this trade-mark, it is my understanding that the courts would grant relief.

Mr. McCUMBER. Take an illustration like this: Take Bayer's aspirin. We seized the patents here and sold them, and the trade-mark with them, and yet it is Bayer's aspirin. It was manufactured in Germany as Bayer's aspirin. If the German manufacturer desires to sell his Bayer's aspirin in the United States to-day he can do so, notwithstanding the fact that the trade-mark has been sold, together with the patent, which is now expired.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator if he interprets the trade-mark law as giving no protection?

Mr. McCUMBER. The trade-mark law has nothing to do with the importation——

Mr. KING. No; I did not say the importation. I said the sale.

Mr. McCUMBER. But let me complete my statement.

Mr. KING. Very well.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the same trade-mark is held in Germany, even though it is sold in the United States in connection with the patent, the German, with the identical thing manufactured under this trade-mark and under the name that he has been in the habit of making it and selling it, can not be prevented from importing it and selling it in the United States.

Mr. KING. I think that the Senator would accept a retainer to bring an injunction suit to prevent the sale of articles where the trade-mark had been taken out under our law and the articles were brought in from Germany and sold in the United States. And I think he would win his case if the facts showed that the American trade-mark had a different name than did the German trade-mark.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am going to ask the Senator some time when it is convenient to read the case of Bourgois against Katzel in the Federal Reporter, volume 275, on that very point.

Mr. KING. My understanding is that the courts have held that trade-marks do not necessarily expire though patents expire. Patents are obtained, and trade-marks relating to the patented articles or formulas may be taken out. As I understand, the courts will under certain conditions protect the holder of the trade-mark even after the life of the patent. I have a book here, published by the Chemical Foundation, showing the four thousand and odd patents which it claims to own.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to say to the Senator that under this very paragraph 26 he will remember we have introduced a provision to prevent the coming in as against trade-mark, which I am going to move to strike out on the floor of the Senate because I think it is improper. It was inserted for that very purpose. But there is no patent whatever now and nothing but the trade-mark to guard it.

Mr. KING. I am very glad the Senator is going to take that step because even if that were wise and fair legislation, it does not seem to me it has any place in a tariff bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator is right.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Did the Senator state the importations of dyes from Germany had to pay a royalty to the Chemical Foundation?

Mr. KING. This is what I said, that dyes which were manufactured in Germany and brought into the United States which were covered by patents sold to the Chemical Foundation and now claimed by the Chemical Foundation——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. You would have to pay a royalty?

Mr. KING. You would have to pay a royalty or they could enjoin you from selling them. My contention is that the patent would protect the owner against infringement, and it would be an infringement to sell dyes in the United States which were covered by patent taken out in the United States.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Does the Senator from Utah know what percentage of the importations are covered by these restrictions?

Mr. KING. Does the Senator mean by that to inquire whether I know the number of dyes that are imported into the United States which are covered by patents?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. No; the percentage of importations that are covered by patents that are compelled to pay a royalty to the Chemical Foundation.

Mr. KING. I gave the percentage in the statement which I made some time ago, but I do not now recall the amount.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Is it not less than one-half of 1 per cent of the total importations?

Mr. KING. No; I do not agree with the Senator there.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That is my information.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator is in error. If that be true, then these patents which the Chemical Foundation is contending for so stoutly would be quite unimportant.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah state what he thinks should have been done with the German patents when we went to war against Germany?

Mr. KING. I think, Mr. President, that we should have pursued the course with respect to the German patents that we did with respect to other property which was seized; we should have held it until the war was over.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And not used them?

Mr. KING. Well, I do not say as to the question of using them; but that is not the question involved. The question of confiscation is what I am talking about.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It seems to me that is the entire question involved.

Mr. KING. As I understand the matter, that is not the question. I have not considered the question of the use of the patents after seizure by the United States. I have talked about the confiscation, and the transfer of the patents to the Chemical Foundation. That is what I am complaining of.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Did we not do so with other property?

Mr. KING. Yes, we did.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is not a patent property?

Mr. KING. Exactly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator think we did wrong in taking certain manufacturing plants owned by alien enemies and selling them?

Mr. KING. I do.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then, the Senator from Utah is opposed to the whole alien property custodian policy as carried out during the war?

Mr. KING. The Senator must divide the question. I was in favor of seizing enemy-owned property and holding it during the war; that I believe was the intention of Senators; but I am opposed to the confiscation of enemy-owned property.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Has it been confiscated?

Mr. KING. Of course, it has been confiscated if it has been sold.

Mr. WADSWORTH. How about the proceeds of the sale?

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator that the broad statement ought perhaps to be subject to qualification. If the property was sold for full value it might not be technical confiscation. And again, let me add, that if the property was perishable—for instance, if a box of oranges or a case of eggs was seized, I think that they should have been sold and the proceeds held.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is not that just what happened as to all this property?

Mr. KING. No; that is not just what happened.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Well, what has happened to the proceeds?

Mr. KING. This is what has happened, Mr. President, if the Senator is talking of confiscation——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I deny the accuracy of the term "confiscation."

Mr. KING. Oh, well, it is confiscation, in my opinion, when property is sold without necessity and for an inadequate consideration.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That may be so, but that does not attack the principle of the thing. Now, I want to know from the Senator whether this Government of ours when it went to war against Germany did a right thing or a wicked thing when it seized property belonging to enemy aliens and sold it and put the proceeds into a fund in the Treasury for future settlement after the war was over?

Mr. KING. The Senator should divide his question. However, I have answered it twice, and I will answer it again. I believe that it was proper legislation to provide for seizing the property, to be held in trust during the war, and to be returned to the owners after the war.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And to hold it idle?

Mr. KING. Wait a minute. If some of the property was perishable in character, there was warrant for its sale; but to sell property which was not perishable, and particularly to sell it for a nominal figure, in my judgment, was confiscation, or at least a policy which may not be justified.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Will the Senator from Utah submit to another question?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Under the alien property custodian act any sale had to be under an Executive order, had it not?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Therefore, when the patents were sold to this private corporation by the Alien Property Custodian——

Mr. KING. They were sold by Executive order. I am familiar with that.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. They were sold by Executive order. President Wilson signed an order confiscating the property, did he not?

Mr. KING. Mr. Wilson, or some one acting for him, signed an order for this sale. Mr. Wilson, of course, could not examine into all the sales and acted, of course, upon the recommendation of others. I regard the order for the sale of the patents as imprudent and improper. The patents were to be held in trust for return to the owners.

I do not believe, Mr. President, in the policy of confiscation. It will be resented not only by patriotic Americans but it will provoke criticism among enlightened nations. The very word "confiscation" is hateful. Of course, there is much to be said in favor of using the property of German nationals which was seized by the Alien Property Custodian to liquidate the claims of American citizens against the German Government for its torts, but I have never been able to accept that view and have constantly insisted that property seized was to be held in trust until the end of the war, and then it was to be restored to the German or Austrian owners of the same.

Let me add that Germany made no attempt to confiscate American patents or to sell them. Indeed, her treatment of seized property was quiet and temperate and far less drastic than the course pursued by the United States. Germany has signified her willingness to restore all property owned by American nationals which was seized during the war. My understanding is that much of the property has been restored.

Mr. President, the patents which were seized should be restored to the Alien Property Custodian and held by him until Congress shall act in the matter. I think that this subject is of so much importance that Congress should consider it at an early date and pass a comprehensive statute dealing with the entire subject. It is possible that the action of Congress may be influenced, and properly should be influenced, by treaties which may be negotiated between the United States and the German Government. However, the underlying principles should be observed; that private property should be immune from confiscation and that American nationals should have restored to them all property which was seized by Germany, and that German nationals should have restored to them all property which was seized by the United States during or since the war.

Mr. President, the question now before the Senate is whether the rates found in paragraphs 25 and 26 shall be maintained. I insist that the rates are inordinately high and will practically amount to an embargo. Later in the consideration of the bill I shall show that these rates, even without the provisions of the bill which permits the President to increase the duties 50 per cent, will act as an embargo against most foreign dyes. In other words, notwithstanding the fact that the domestic dyes are several hundred per cent above pre-war prices, the situation in Germany is such that many of the dyes manufactured there, if imported to the United States under the rates imposed in this bill, would be sold at less, though the prices here are far above pre-war levels. The 60 per cent ad valorem and the 7 cents specific on the finished dyes, I repeat, will be an effectual embargo as to most dyes.

This bill without the embargo provision gives the domestic dye manufacturers a monopoly of the domestic market, but influences back of the dye interests are so powerful that I have no doubt they will obtain the rates provided in paragraphs 25 and 26. I desire, however, to enter my protest against the same, and I shall ask the Senate to accept amendments that will reduce the tendered rates to from high to temperate levels. I have stated that I am making no war upon the dye industry. That industry is now well established. It has millions invested. It has mobilized great resources and it constitutes a powerful ally to the chemical interests of the United States. I desire to deal fairly and justly with all industries. The pernicious activities of the dye interests, their persistent lobbying, their misrepresentations of the facts and of the situation—all these things have not aroused any prejudices which would not have influenced me in offering the amendment which I have suggested and further amendments which I shall tender to the Senate.

The Present Status of Adjusted Compensation.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. A. PIATT ANDREW,
OF MASSACHUSETTS,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, June 20, 1922.

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the decision of the Senate Republican caucus not to adjourn before disposing of both the tariff and the veterans' compensation bills would seem to assure the adoption during the present session of Congress of the much-belated settlement with the soldiers and sailors of the World War. The bill favorably reported by the Senate Finance Committee is virtually the bill that passed the House March 23 last by the overwhelming majority of 333 to 70. It contains a few modifications in details, but only one change that is important. It eliminates completely the extraneous and dubiously expensive reclamation project which had been grafted upon it by the reclamation group in Congress.

GROUP HOBBIES HAVE DELAYED BILL.

It has been one of the misfortunes of the compensation plan which has multiplied opposition to it in the country and has helped to delay its adoption that one group after another has tried to further some particular hobby by tying that hobby to the bonus proposition. "Wets" have sought to alter the Volstead Act by arranging to pay for the bonus by a tax upon wine and beer. Advocates of a sales tax have tried to secure its adoption under the guise of providing money for the soldiers. Opponents of the money market have tried to further their ideas by linking bonus legislation with taxes intended to hinder stock and bond transactions.

These propositions, though presented to Congress in the form of bills or amendments, never got beyond the stage of discussion. Those who had advocated a general and nation-wide plan for reclamation projects, and who had heretofore received little encouragement in Congress, actually succeeded, however, in injecting this project into the veterans' compensation bill as reported by the House Ways and Means Committee, and under the rule preventing amendments by which this bill passed the House project was adopted by the House itself. This feature of the bill, had it been enacted into law, would in all likelihood have cost the Government several hundred millions of dollars, although it would have offered to veterans no commensurate benefits and, in fact, no specific choice of benefits for many years to come. It was an irrelevant, ill-considered, and extravagant proposition, and the Senate committee acted wisely in rejecting it.

PRIMARILY MATTER OF INSURANCE.

Veterans' compensation, as it awaits the vote of the Senate to-day, is primarily a matter of insurance. Speaking in general terms, the bill offers to every veteran of the World War a free insurance policy, proportioned in value to the time he served in the Government's forces during the war, payable to himself at the end of 20 years, or payable to his beneficiary or estate in case he dies during the intervening period. It also offers as alternative for his choice immediate aid in vocational training or in the purchase of a house or farm. The cash bonus, as such, has been eliminated, except for those who served only a few weeks, and to whom not more than $50 would be owing—the maximum aggregate of such payments being estimated at about $16,000,000.

If all the four and a half million veterans were to choose the insurance benefit, the ultimate expense involved, it is estimated, might reach the total of approximately four and a half billion dollars, but this would be distributed over a period of at least 20, and perhaps more than 40, years. If all were to choose the alternative of vocational training, the total might reach a little over $2,000,000,000, most of which would naturally have to be paid during the next three or four years. If all were to choose farm or home aid, the total expense is estimated at somewhat less than $2,000,000,000, distributed over the next seven years.

THREE PER CENT ON ANNUAL BUDGET.

These are the outermost possible limits. The actual ultimate total cost and the actual cost for any one year depend upon the choice of the veterans as between these alternatives. They are not definitely determinable in advance, but are subject to rough estimation. We are doubtless justified in assuming that relatively few veterans at this late day will choose vocational training. The Senate committee thinks that not more than 2½ per cent of them will so choose, and they estimate the cost as about $52,000,000, divided between the next three years. It is believed unlikely that more than one veteran in four will choose farm or home aid, but if such a proportion of veterans apply for this type of benefit, the total expenditure involved would reach about $460,000,000 in the course of seven years, or an average of about $65,000,000 per year. The expense of insurance, it is estimated, will not average more than $20,000,000 annually for the next three years. On the basis of these estimates, the total cost of veterans' compensation in its various forms will average not much above $100,000,000 per year in 1923, 1924, and 1925, which would mean an addition of little more than 3 per cent to the annual budget.

According to the provisions of the bill, beginning with 1926, the veteran will be able to borrow from the Government on the security of his insurance certificates, and on that account the annual expense will be increased thereafter, but each such annual increase involves a more than proportional decrease in the ultimate total cost, because the certificates which are retained intact by veterans until maturity acquire additional value.

WAR DEBT GREATLY REDUCED.

The sums involved are unquestionably large, as were, in fact, all the expenses entailed by the World War. But how preposterous is the claim that the country can not afford to acquit its obligations to its veterans is evidenced by the fact, to which Mr. Mellon points with pardonable pride, that our Government has already in the three years since the war reduced its debt by three and a half billions of dollars, a sum more than twice that which would have been required to pay in cash the entire bonus to the veterans. In three years our Treasury has paid off 14 per cent of its total indebtedness. At the present rate of reduction, the entire Government debt will be extinguished by 1943, when most of the veterans insurance will mature. It is to be remembered in this connection that our allies in the late war still owe us more than eleven billions, and whether or not the greater part of this is ever paid, if only the British Government continues to pay interest upon its indebtedness to us on the scale for which it has provided during the coming year, that interest alone will cover every expense involved in the proposed adjusted compensation measure.

THE HOUR HAS ARRIVED.

Among the reasons heretofore advanced for delaying the adoption of the compensation bill were the scarcity of money, the high interest rates everywhere prevailing, and the low prices of our Government bonds, all of which made it difficult for the Government to secure funds and meet its obligations. Such arguments, however, have lost much of their force, when Liberty and Victory bonds have risen to par, when bank credits and reserves are at their highest levels in history, and when American bankers are ready to consider the loan of billions to countries that were so recently our enemies.

President Harding, in writing to Mr. Fordney last February, said: "I am aware of the sentiment in Congress in favor of adjusted compensation. I have spoken approvingly myself, always with the reservation that the bestowal shall be made when it may be done without such injury to the country as will nullify the benefits to the ex-service men themselves which this expression of gratitude is designed to bestow."

One can not but respect the reasons for the President's hesitation at the time when he wrote. But are there not now good grounds for believing that that hour has at last arrived when this expression of gratitude can be safely bestowed upon our veterans for the services they rendered and for which every man, woman, and child in the country really felt grateful, four and more years ago?

Banish Liquor from Ships and Everywhere.

SPEECH
OF
HON. WILLIAM D. UPSHAW, OF GEORGIA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, June 15, 1922.

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11872) to amend the Panama Canal act.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman, before addressing myself to the main question in my speech to-day I feel constrained to make a faithful report to this House concerning a trip recently taken in the South, and where, in a large gathering in Georgia attended by many men from different States, I found a kind of universal opinion down there, freely expressed, that if this Congress does not hurry up and accept the sensible Henry Ford offer for Muscle Shoals the people will give him the White House when the time comes around. They have faith in his wonderful business ability—faith in his humanitarian treatment of his employees—and they believe that he, more than any other man, or set of men, will make Muscle Shoals a great national commercial and agricultural asset, and the people demand quick action.

Recent utterances on this floor, Mr. Chairman, by a number of gentlemen, including the vacant vaporings of the genial gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN], have moved me to reply to their contention and their flagrant effort to discourage the enforcement of our national prohibition law. This theme is always vital to every man who believes in national morals and God-fearing patriotism. But the revelations brought out on the floor of the House and in the papers concerning the sale of liquor on American ships are simply astounding. The position of the Shipping Board is utterly untenable. The eighteenth amendment was put into our organic law after due governmental process to outlaw the manufacture, transportation, and sale of intoxicating liquors. The Volstead Act promptly and imperatively followed it up in compliance with that new constitutional provision to enforce the eighteenth amendment. The question now before the American people is a question of the competency of this Government to make its own laws and execute its own laws. If ships claim the privilege, the protection, of the American flag beyond the 3-mile limit, then, God knows, every law of justice and patriotism and national loyalty and salvation will demand that they obey the laws of the flag that protects them everywhere. [Applause.]

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. UPSHAW. Yes.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Have you any views on the question as to what effect it will have on our commerce and to what extent it would affect the subsidy to keep our commerce equal to that with which it is in competition?

Mr. UPSHAW. Answering the gentleman's question in general terms, may I refer to the statement made by Mr. Lasker at a function in Washington last night?

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. That is what I mean.

Mr. UPSHAW. I am told that he declared that our merchant marine would practically have to go out of business if it did not sell liquor on board.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UPSHAW. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I happened to be at that function to which the gentleman makes reference, and Mr. Lasker made no such statement.

Mr. UPSHAW. I am delighted to hear it. A man who was there told me he did. May I ask the gentleman from Idaho what was Mr. Lasker's statement?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I do not care to discuss that matter, but I wish to say that Mr. Lasker did not make that statement.

Mr. LONDON. Assuming that the sale of liquor would be profitable, that would not justify the violation of a law, would it?

Mr. UPSHAW. Not at all. I am just coming to that.

Mr. LONDON. May I make another suggestion? The Constitution does not prohibit the use of liquor for medicinal purposes. That does not necessarily mean that a physician must prescribe the consumption of liquor. If a man feels that the drinking of liquor will cure disease and will be beneficial to him, I think he is strictly within the Constitution if he takes a drink. [Applause.]

Mr. UPSHAW. I will say this to the gentleman from New York—and may I say to other interested gentlemen that just now I prefer not to be interrupted until I declare myself on this matter. Mr. Lasker had been quoted in the papers, even before last night's function, as saying that he counts it absolutely legitimate to sell liquor on board the ships, and that it will continue to be sold there until there is a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States to the contrary. He also takes the general position—or the newspaper correspondents so credit him—that the merchant marine ships can not profitably sail without selling liquor; in other words, that they can not successfully compete with foreign ships that do sell liquor. That is the same old groundless argument that we heard all over America when many men were throwing their arms around the saloon and declaring, as they fondly hugged it to their bosoms, that if the saloon were outlawed real estate would go down, that hotels could not operate, and that grass would grow in the streets of our great cities. I will answer that with the statement of my brilliant and genial friend, Bob Broyles, a rugged orator and multimerchant, in Atlanta, at the legislative hearing in Georgia when he said, "They say that grass will grow in the streets of Atlanta if we abolish the saloon; let it grow; I would rather raise a little more hay and a little less hell." And you know that the spirit that will allow American ships to violate the law is fatally unsound. That human debauchery was outlawed in both Houses of Congress with the approval of the President of the United States and with the ratification of 46 States of the American Union, and with the approval of the Supreme Court of the United States. So with this devilish thing outlawed it is utterly unthinkable and un-American that the United States Government, beneath its own flag, should permit the ships which it protects to trample under foot the spirit of the Constitution, and any man who takes that position is trampling the Constitution beneath his feet and defying the flag above his head. [Applause.]

If we believe in the constitutional righteousness of the action that outlawed the liquor traffic, which was the great, heartless highway robber that took $2,500,000,000 annually over the counter out of the pockets of the American people, and which was the greatest enemy to efficiency and happiness that the workingman ever knew—if we believe in outlawing this devilish thing, it is unthinkable that the American Government can not bring its own ships under the spirit and the letter of this law. I want to be conservative. I do not believe in being extreme, except in being extremely honest and extremely right; but I want to say frankly that as the friend of American youth and American manhood and the purity and happiness of the American home, I would rather see a whole fleet of ships, without passengers, sunk to the bottom of the sea than to see the moral standard of our flag lowered in the eyes of the American people and of the onlooking world. [Applause.] And I want to say that if it was a right thing and a brave thing—and I think it was—for the President of the United States to call other nations in fellowship to try to stop the waste and horror and hell of war, it would also be a brave, fine, moral inspiration for the President of the United States to call into conference the other nations that want to sail liquor ships into our ports, and enter into an agreement not to debauch the people who come to our shores. It is our duty to say to foreign ships, we have a right to say to foreign ships, "If you want to come into our ports and violate our laws and make it convenient and tempting for our people to debauch themselves and trample upon our Constitution, then you can not come in." That is national common sense. That is international reciprocity. Other nations ought to be ashamed to seek our hand in trade and spit in the face of our law at the same time. To say that the shipping business of the world will stop for the lack of booze is an outrage on international morals and the basic stability of international commerce.

Mr. Chairman, if we obey the law that allows no ship to carry liquor, to transport it in any way within the 3-mile limit, then there will be no liquor aboard when that ship gets beyond the 3-mile limit.

I referred in the beginning of my speech to the "vacant vaporings" of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN]. Not only did he recently regale this House with facetious and unprecedented—unprecedented on his part—for law enforcement to be applied to the Shipping Board—for once, wonder of wonders, a "wet" Democrat from Boston and a "dry" Democrat from Georgia are found in accord—but he made on February 8 an elongated argument against our prohibition law in general, which I would have answered at the time but for my absence on account of a family sorrow.

If it was the desire of the Member from Massachusetts to carve for himself a name which shall go thundering down the corridors of time and cause it to stand out clear-cut in the annals of the history of the Sixty-seventh Congress, he chose a most effective way of accomplishing his purpose in the presentation of his speech before the congressional body on February 8, in which he declared the past two years of law enforcement have been hell.

The speech was largely or, it might be said, entirely devoted to an attack on certain prohibition leaders in and out of Congress. The attack was an excoriating statement of the alleged personal financial interests of these, of the averred extravagant sum being expended in the work of law enforcement, and the claim that nothing is being accomplished and that the country is in a far worse condition than ever before. As to the attack on individuals I shall not reply. These gentlemen are all of good standing and they need no defense.

Concerning the statement that nothing is being accomplished we should like to call the attention of the Member from Massachusetts to the statement of the national highest official, the President of the United States, who says:

In every community men and women have had an opportunity now to know what prohibition means. They know that debts are more promptly paid, that men take home wages that once were wasted in saloons, that families are better clothed and fed, and more money finds its way into the savings banks. The liquor traffic was destructive of much that was most precious in American life.

In the face of so much evidence on that point what conscientious man would want to let his own selfish desires influence him to vote to bring it back? In another generation I believe that liquor will have disappeared not only from our politics but from our memories.

This of itself should be sufficient, but, with an abundance of evidence to combat the statement that nothing is being accomplished, no benefits derived, that conditions are even worse, that there is more drunkenness than heretofore, we will endeavor to enlighten the Member who has suffered so seriously during the two years of prohibition, the result of his suffering perhaps having been such that it has been impossible for him to advise himself as to true conditions and the phenomenal progress that is being and has been made in freeing the country from the curse of drink.

NOT A GOOD LOSER.

Mr. GALLIVAN has evidently been so obsessed with the deplorable conditions, as set forth by him, precipitated by two years of prohibition, that he has failed to inform himself as to the fundamental principle of law enforcement. He seems to think the entire propaganda emanated from the fertile brain of a few active leaders in the movement, as mentioned by him, for their own personal and financial interests.

The matter was put to the vote of the people throughout the United States through the various legislatures, which resulted in a vote of 80 per cent majority in the senates and 86 per cent by the members of the houses for the ratification of the national prohibition amendment.

Prohibition is the law—a part of the fundamental law of the Nation. "Now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of law enforcement." Mr. GALLIVAN is not a good loser, as indicated in his address before the Members of the House on Wednesday, February 8. Law enforcement is one of many laws. Abraham Lincoln said, "Let reverence for the laws be the political religion of the Nation." A citizen can not choose what laws he will obey, and it has been cited by the Attorney General of the United States that those who do not believe in our Government and the enforcement of our laws should go to a country which gives them their peculiar liberty.

The organized outlawed liquor dealers, encouraged by the utterances of Mr. GALLIVAN and other liquor champions, do make it difficult to enforce the law. No one claims that the prohibition law is completely enforced, but all the wet organizations in the world can not galvanize into life the dead body of John Barleycorn.

Senator FRANK B. WILLIS, of Ohio, brought a large audience to its feet at the Lyric, in Baltimore, recently by the declaration:

You know, as I know, that there would be no rum runners and bootleggers if there were no purchasers of bootleg liquor. The man who patronizes a bootlegger is as guilty as the worst bootlegger himself.

Chief Justice G. T. Marshall, of the Supreme Court of Ohio, has declared:

Lax enforcement of prohibition laws is causing a general contempt for other criminal statutes and is directly responsible for the crime wave which has been sweeping the country and rendering property and human life insecure.

Bishop Thoburn Nicholson, of the Thoburn Church, Chicago, in his annual sermon a few weeks ago, said:

Europe drunk can never compete with the United States sober. You stand by your guns and make it true that the United States is dry and we shall have a sober England, France, and Germany before our children die. The same is true of every nation.

We trust these excerpts from leaders and men of deep thought will awaken some new thoughts and ideas in the mind of Mr. GALLIVAN and his associates who may voice his sentiments, and prove to him that his influence is not in keeping with the position he occupies as a Representative to voice the interest of his constituents and bend his energies for the best good for the greatest of people. Law enforcement is "of the people, by the people, and for the people," and has already been proven so and accepted as such by the large majority of the people of the United States.

CONDITIONS GREATLY IMPROVED UNDER PROHIBITION.

Mr. GALLIVAN has said that there has been no improvements in conditions in the past two years. We beg the attention of the Member from Massachusetts for the consideration of a general résumé of conditions selected at random. It is universally conceded that the holiday trade this year was phenomenal. It has been said—and the explanation is generally accepted—that since the country has quit wasting more than $2,000,000,000 a year on drink there is more money being spent for the comforts and luxuries of home.

In an address on the subject "Two years of prohibition in Philadelphia," the Rev. Clarence E. McCartney, pastor of one of the leading Presbyterian churches of that city, showed that in six banks in the principal labor centers of Philadelphia deposits jumped from $8,965,000 in 1917 to $19,494,000 the first of this year, over double the amount. The Rev. Mr. McCartney also quoted from the medical director of Philadelphia General Hospital, showing there were 2,326 cases of alcoholism admitted to the hospital in 1918 and only 702 cases in 1921, a decrease of more than half, almost two-thirds, and the city of Philadelphia in 1921 had the lowest mortality rate in its entire history.

From the superintendent of the Philadelphia police, Doctor McCartney secured figures to show that the average arrests for intoxication for two years before prohibition became effective was 29,754 and for 1920 and 1921 the average was 18,081. In 1917 there were 9,456 persons arrested in Philadelphia charged with being drunk and disorderly, while in 1921 the number was reduced to 5,232.

The mayor of Cheyenne, Wyo., Ed. P. Taylor, sends the following report, signed by City Clerk Charles C. Bailey, under date of February 7, 1922:

	1917	1921	Reduction.
Arrests for drunkenness	907	150	757
Arrests for disorderly conduct	849	211	638
Violations of liquor laws	64	36	28
"Domestic" crimes (wife beating)	5	1	4
Arrests in aggregate	3,072	1,341	1,731

The death rate in 1921, the first full year of prohibition, was the lowest ever recorded in the United States and Canada. This fact is indicated in the statistical bulletin of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., of New York, which numbers 14,000,000 industrial policyholders, approximately one-eighth of the total population of the two countries. The mortality of the insured reached the low rate of 8.5 per thousand lives.

In Akron, Ohio, there were 1,000 fewer arrests in 1921 for violation of the prohibition law.

A recent summary of prohibition results points out—

INCONTESTABLE FACTS.

Facts, not theories, are interesting to hard-headed Americans. Thus far we have had only partially enforced prohibition. The law went into effect during the war, when conditions were unsettled. Immediately thereafter the national political conventions were held and prohibition was made a political football until the November election. Then a new administration was installed and the old force knew it would be changed and its morale was broken. The new force is being installed and we shall have a better opportunity to find out what prohibition will do in the next two or three years than at any other time. But even facing these handicaps drunkenness has decreased.

In 51 of the largest cities of the United States, having a total population of approximately 20,000,000, including New York, Chicago, and Philadelphia, the official figures show a decrease in arrests for drunkenness from 307,109 in 1917 to 108,835 in 1920.

Official statistics from the 39 largest cities in Indiana, with a combined population of 994,287, show a decrease in arrests for drunkenness of 70.64 per cent in 1920 as compared with 1917, the last year the State was wet.

Detroit reduced the arrests for drunkenness from 19,309 in the year 1917 to 6,244 in 1920.

The Boston police department reported 5,287 fewer arrests for all causes in 1920 than from drunkenness alone in 1919. For the State of Massachusetts at large the arrests for drunkenness in 1920 were 32,560, as against 77,025 in 1919. The reports of the Massachusetts prison commission give the arrests for drunkenness for the years ending September 30 as follows:

Boston:
1921	30,987
State of Massachusetts:
1917	129,485
1921	56,932

The total for 1920 and 1921, combined in Boston and the State of Massachusetts, is smaller than for any full single license year.

In 1917 the arrests for drunkenness in New York City were 14,182; in 1920 the number dropped to 5,813, and deaths from alcoholism decreased from 560 in 1917 to 98 in 1920. In New York State the total arrests for intoxication in 1917 were 36,724; in 1921 the arrests for that cause numbered 18,112.

In Milwaukee the following figures show the result of prohibition in the city which beer made "famous":

Drunk and disorderly:
1915	3,073
1917	4,738
1920	1,247
1921	3,375

Louisville, Ky., reports 3,624 arrests for drunkenness for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, wet; and only 412 arrests for the same cause for the year ending June 30, 1920.

The number of cases of intoxication in Cincinnati decreased from 14,070 in 1918 to about 500 in 1921.

The number of arrests in Denver for 1915—the last wet year—for drunkenness was 3,227; in 1920, 899.

The population of the city of Richmond, Va., has increased 27 per cent in the four years the State has been dry, but the arrests for drunkenness and disorderly conduct have decreased 75 per cent.

The number of arrests for drunkenness the last wet fiscal year in Grand Rapids, Mich., 1917–18, was 1,734. For the year 1919–20 the number was 421.

St. Louis reduced the number of cases of drunkenness from 2,605 in 1919 to 993 in 1921.

Peoria, former whisky center in Illinois, reduced the total arrests for drunkenness for the year ending July 1, 1920, to 295, as compared with 1,780 for the preceding year.

Baltimore in 1918 had 2,996 arrests for drunkenness; in 1921, 2,258. Concord, N. H., had an average of 41.5 arrests for drunkenness per month from 1903 to 1913; in 1921 the average was 10.5.

The arrests for drunkenness in Washington, D. C., from November to November for the year 1918 were 10,793; for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1921, 5,765.

In Portland, Me., in 1915, under an administration of nonenforcement, there were 4,564 arrests for drunkenness; in 1921, 1,033.

The effect of prohibition is also marked on crimes related to liquor. Sanford Bates, Massachusetts commissioner of correction, says that in spite of unemployment, increase of population, and after-war conditions the entire penal population of Massachusetts shows a decrease of 3,625; in September, 1914, the penal population was 6,877; in September, 1921, it was 3,252. This is an increase over the figures of 1919 and 1920, and yet it is still over 50 per cent less than under the license system.

A survey by the Ohio Institute for Public Efficiency shows that four workhouses have been closed by prohibition, and about 10,000 fewer persons were in the workhouses the first full dry year than in the wet years immediately preceding.

In Washington, D. C., the saloons were limited to 300 in 1914. District prohibition went into effect in 1917 and national prohibition in 1920. Commitments to the workhouse are as follows: 1914, 6,590; 1915, 6,472; 1916, 6,458; 1917, 5,582; 1918, 3,232; 1919, 2,511; 1920, 833.

The report of the Detroit police department just published, giving the record for the first nine months of 1921, is illuminating. It says:

The records of the first nine months of this year show that notwithstanding the fact that the city has passed through the most serious condition of unemployment in many years, its crime record for the four major crimes—robbery, breaking and entering business places, breaking and entering dwellings, and larceny from the person—was 61 per cent below that of a year ago, and far below the average of the five years past.

These are but samples of results in nearly every city and town in the country showing the universal effect of prohibition upon drunkenness and its related crimes. Here and there the arrests for drunkenness have increased slightly this year over 1920 where there has been a let down in law enforcement, but in every instance the number of arrests for drunkenness is smaller than under the license system. This showing would be even better were it not for the fact that when the saloons were legalized the policy in nearly all of the large cities was not to arrest a man for drunkenness unless he became a public nuisance.

In cities like Cleveland, Ohio, the golden-rule policy was adopted, urging the saloon keeper to take care of the drunken man until he could get sober enough to go home, or to put him in the hands of his friends and let them take him home. The disgrace of an arrest was avoided wherever possible. Since prohibition has been established, in cities where the police officers are unfriendly, they arrest everyone who shows the slightest sign of intoxication in order to discredit prohibition by making the arrests appear large in number. In places where the officers are alert and active arrests are made of those slightly intoxicated for the purpose of compelling them to tell where they get the liquor. If the same policy were followed with reference to arrests for drunkenness that we had before prohibition, the showing would be even more encouraging. As it is, it stands out in bold contrast with the record in England and Wales and other countries, where convictions for drunkenness are increasing at about the same rate that they are decreasing in this country. The official report recently presented to Parliament by command of His Majesty the King gives the statistics on convictions for drunkenness in England and Wales for the year 1920. This is the striking fact in this 140-page report.

The total number of convictions for drunkenness in England and Wales in 1920, as compared with 1919, shows an increase of 37,815, or 65.26 per cent.

The people of the United States have the greatest affection for their allies and have no disposition to embarrass any of them unduly in their financial obligations to this country. But if Americans were to be as critical of England's drink policy as many visiting Britons are of American prohibition, we could easily suggest that if England would only stop her enormous drink waste of nearly $2,000,000,000 annually it would not be so very difficult for her to meet the interest payments upon her debt to the United States.

Prohibition has paid Washington and has paid heavily. It is still paying. Practically all of New York's former 9,000 saloons are closed or are being used for legitimate purposes. Prohibition has made only two changes in New York City: First, the city is more prosperous because of it, and, second, the city is less lawless because of it. Maxim's in an advertisement said:

Who said prohibition hurts business? Come to Maxim's and see.

Regarding Louisville, Ky.:

Louisville is a paradise to-day compared to what it was before prohibition went into effect. There are practically no empty houses in Louisville to-day; there is work for everybody who will go out and get it; prohibition is working wonders. Men are paying their rent, paying their bills, and are looking out for a rainy day.

From Peoria, Ill.:

All of the saloon property in Peoria is used for drink parlors, residences, offices, etc. The Peoria distilleries—13 in number, located in Peoria and Pekin—are now used for other purposes. I believe there is not an empty building in Peoria and 500 to 1,000 residences are needed.

So much for predicted depression. As for Cincinnati, Ohio, the report is practically all saloon properties have been rented for other purposes and usually at an advanced price; collections are much better and forfeitures about one-fifth the number under liquor rule.

Prohibition has had a splendid effect—

Says Warren Richards & Co.

Properties formerly rented for purposes of retailing liquors are now renting for figures 25 to 50 per cent higher—

Say Bofington & Hopkins.

Every director and stockholder in this company—

Writes Nathaniel H. Maxwell—

are thinking prohibition the greatest benefit that has ever come to this or any other country, and they would consider a return to former days an unparalleled calamity.

These reports are selected at random, and the same condition prevails throughout the country. The consumption of liquor has decreased not less than 85 per cent and possibly more than 90 per cent. There is a marked decrease in poverty and financial distress. Private distilling and brewing are insignificant factors.

These conclusions—

Reads the report—

are the result of an investigation covering months in which 20,000 pastors and lay members of churches have been consulted. The official figures on crime and increase in financial ability have been obtained from State, city, and rural officials, chiefs of police departments, and from secretaries of chambers of commerce, real estate dealers, and merchants.

We trust these citations of business, financial, domestic, and social conditions under prohibition will relieve the mind of the Member from Massachusetts as to the success and salutary effect of prohibition, and that by a large majority prohibition does prohibit.

And judging the future by the past, we realize it is more than probable the Member who has found the last two years of prohibition spells hell, not only with a capital H but all capitals, will endeavor to combat the statement of Secretary Deets Pickett and relegate him to the class of the alleged oligarchy of money grabbers, the triune law enforcers—Haynes, Wheeler, and Volstead—and swear Deets is the fourth wheel to the golden chariot, we deem it best to give a few scattering instances where there can be no question of personal graft.

Lieut. Col. Emil Marcusson, of the Salvation Army, says:

Before prohibition in our big hotel in Chicago, which has 675 beds, not more than 15 guests received bank statements each month. Now we receive no less than 300, and I don't know how many have savings accounts.

Commander Evangeline Booth, of the Salvation Army, says:

The army's social secretary reports that drunkenness among the men frequenting Salvation Army hotels and industrial homes has almost entirely disappeared. Men who formerly could hardly support themselves from day to day now possess savings accounts. In one hotel 25 men who, before prohibition became effective, could only muster a dime among them, now have deposits ranging from $100 to $500.

INDIANA TEACHERS TESTIFY.

At a large public gathering at Indianapolis on February 8, the superintendent of public instruction stated that—

Teachers are unanimous in their opinion that since prohibition pupils are better fed, better clothed, more regular in attendance, more punctual, less anemic, healthier, and happier.

In the opinion of the superintendent, the continuation of the eighteenth amendment means better rising Americans. On the occasion of the celebration of temperance day in the schools the teachers of Columbus said still further that there are now fewer complaints from the home and report of the unhappy conditions resulting from a drunken father or mother. And while it is a matter of gratification and comfort to be well clad and well fed it is also a matter of vital importance that the victims of drunkenness in the home are spared the nervous strain and dread, the cruel blows, the bloody wounds, and broken bones, of which we hear but little to-day.

Even the children realize—if the Member from Massachusetts may not—the absence of blear-eyed, staggering, foul-mouthed victims of drink along the street.

While those opposed to prohibition and law enforcement say there is as much drinking to-day as ever, a child can realize that with the vast number of saloons closed and immense breweries with a 24-hour output of wet goods and the daily confiscation of hundreds of carloads of drink it would be an absolute impossibility to have as much drunkenness as heretofore, no matter if there are stills in operation in many places.

Everyone should, as a law-loving, law-abiding citizen, point with pride to law enforcement. There are those who would like law enforcement a bit lax in some respects and others might seek a new angle of departure from strict observance of what this law provides. "Personal privilege" noticeably shifts with the viewpoint. The man who carries a gun or other weapon of warfare wants the privilege of carrying his weapon; the slugger wants the personal privilege of putting his victim out of commission with his weapon; the individual so inclined craves the privilege of committing arson when he feels so inclined; the burglar, the murderer, and the horse thief desire personal privileges according to their calling, while the "liberal citizen," who is opposed to the workings of his fellow men along the line of their special calling, would reserve for himself the privilege of breaking the prohibition law at his own pleasure. Because illegal drink is killing people does not change the law any more than the gunman might be excused for using a rifle instead of some other deadly weapon or the yegg for using nitro instead of dynamite. The greatest good for the greatest number is through prohibition until it has been fairly tried, and, if it is then a failure, it can be repealed. Do not sidestep the prohibition law and then expect to bring to justice some one for breaking some other law. The way to have respect for the law is to see that people obey the law. It is not what one does or does not want individually, but what is on the statute books for the enforcement is the question which should be uppermost.

Blackstone, the great authority on fundamental law, says:

Each individual should submit to the law of the community, without which submission of all it is impossible that protection should be extended to any.

From coast to coast throughout the vast expanse of our country men and women who would resent any reflection on their honor, sincerity, and right living are openly violating the law by continuing to indulge themselves in the use of drink which has been outlawed, while others are engaged in the manufacture of the same. For some time the domestic ice-cream freezer has been brought into requisition as a receptacle for private brewing, and later several hundred coconuts were discovered at the railway station at Minneapolis, the milk having been removed and the coconut filled with Jamaica rum. Cork plugs becoming loosened in the eye of one of the coconuts led to the discovery of the rum.

The judicial section of the American Bar Association, venturing to speak for all the judges, expressed this warning to the American people:

Reverence for the law and the enforcement of the law depends mainly upon the ideals and customs of those who occupy the vantage ground of life in business and society. The people of the United States, by solemn constitutional and statutory enactment, have undertaken to suppress the age-long evil of the liquor traffic.

Attention is called to the further statement of the judicial section of the American Bar Association, and to which we should especially invite the attention of the Member from Massachusetts who has found the past two years of prohibition to be hell:

When, for the gratification of their appetites or the promotion of their interests, lawyers, bankers, great merchants and manufacturers, and social leaders, both men and women, disobey and scoff at this law, or any other law, they are aiding the cause of anarchy and promoting mob violence and homicide; they are sowing dragon's teeth, and they need not be surprised when they find that no judicial or police authority can save our country or humanity from reaping the harvest.

The foregoing is the opinion of those best qualified to know whereof they speak and to speak with authority. Besides the expressed opinion and cooperation of the judicial section of the American Bar Association in the matter of the prohibition amendment and law enforcement, it has the indorsement of Holy Writ, where we read:

Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging. Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink. No drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of God. If eating meat makes thy brother to sin, eat no more meat.

The Attorney General, Harry M. Daugherty, in a widely quoted speech delivered at the meeting of the American Bar Association at Cincinnati, August 31, 1921, said, among other things:

The history of civilization has been one continuous struggle for law and order. Respect for law is the one essential fact of our civilization. Without it life, liberty, and property are insecure. A citizen can not choose what laws he will obey. A good citizen must obey all the laws. Those who do not believe in our Government and the enforcement of our laws should go to a country which gives them their peculiar liberty. My duty is clear. As long as I am the responsible head of the Department of Justice the law will be enforced with all the power possessed by the Government which I am at liberty to call to my command.

William Jennings Bryan says:

I want a Government that will plant a hope in the heart of every child born into the world and give every being something to live for.

The Federal prohibition commissioner, Maj. Roy A. Haynes, has said:

There are 30 paid organizations striving day and night to accomplish the impossible feat of causing the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. No law can be enforced 100 per cent—

He said, declaring that the chief present obstacles in enforcement of the Volstead Act were apathetic citizens and lethargic public officials—

The "wets" have spread carefully planned propaganda to make it appear that the prohibition law is a failure and can not be enforced. The propagandists put in capital letters the liquor imported into this country. The facts show that the total importation during the past fiscal year were one-half of 1 per cent of the consumption of liquor in the United States the year before prohibition. Propaganda says crime has increased. Facts show that the crime wave is world-wide. Facts show that arrests for drunkenness have decreased 60 per cent in this country. Facts show that liquor withdrawals from warehouses during October were only 50 per cent of the withdrawals in the previous October. I wish we might have in America a revival of regard for the sanctity of the law. I wish it might be preached by the parent in the home as well as by the teacher in the school; by the preacher in the pulpit; the writer and cartoonist; the actor on the stage; by every good citizen and agency.

The activities of these new "wet" organizations are argument enough that the friends of prohibition must not sleep. Theodore Roosevelt said: "The liquor traffic tends to produce criminality in the populace at large and lawbreaking among the saloon keepers themselves."

INSPIRING REVIEW OF TWO "DRY" YEARS.

Responding to a newspaper request for a résumé of the actual results, covering two years of prohibition, Commissioner Haynes authorized the following statement:

The amendment is being enforced to an even greater extent than many devoted friends anticipated, and predictions of opponents and antagonists that an "army" would be required and rebellion would occur in metropolitan centers, especially among the foreign element, have not been borne out by actualities. Instead of an "army" results which below are enumerated have been accomplished by less than 2,000 agents, operating in 48 States, the District of Columbia, Alaska, Porto Rico, and Hawaii, among more than 120,000,000 people, results which are nothing short of remarkable. Instead of rebellion or revolution, people generally, foreign and otherwise, have quietly acquiesced in the law—one of the most revolutionary in the world's history—and those now engaged in the illicit traffic constitute a negligible minority.

Results so outstanding that no attempt can successfully be made in denial may be enumerated as follows:

1. Disappearance of the open saloon.
2. Abatement of open drinking in public dining rooms.
3. Passing of the treating evil, which was recognized as the greatest contributing agency in the development of a liquor appetite.
4. Closing of whisky cure and similar institutions.
5. Increased savings accounts.
6. Record-breaking Christmas business.
7. Decreased drunkenness.
8. Prohibitive price of "bonded" liquor for beverage use.
9. Dangerous character of illicit whisky.
10. Surreptitiousness of present-day drinking.
11. Wail of howling minority who would go to the length of undermining the Constitution in order to nullify an amendment which their own action demonstrates is in actual effect.
12. Changed attitude of former hostile statesmen, political leaders, and the press.

In addition to the above, Evangeline Booth, of the Salvation Army, is authority for the statement that many jails have been converted into dwelling apartments, prisons turned into schools and social centers, health has been improved, mortality reduced, with increase of the privileges and opportunities of life for the boys and girls of the poorer classes.

These are the outstanding results which speak for themselves and offset completely propaganda of a contrary nature, which would apply with equal force to all laws, because none are enforced with 100 per cent effectiveness.

Considering all existing conditions, inherited and developed habits, hostile organizations, and an anti-American foreign element, it is most remarkable and unprecedented that a force of less than 2,000 agents, in a short space of two years, has accomplished such marked results without upheavals, violence, or revolutions, as was prophesied.

It will be a much easier undertaking from now on for various reasons:

1. Helpful attitude of the patriotic press, which recognizes the danger of lax enforcement to constitutional government, and which stands four-square for enforcement of all laws.
2. Aroused citizenship.
3. Closer cooperation on the part of all enforcement agencies, headed by the United States Attorney General.
4. Poisonous, death-dealing character of practically all illicit liquors now on the market.
5. Attitude of Canadian and other foreign officials against border smuggling.
6. More stringent State legislation.
7. Maximum penalty by courts.
8. Less leniency on the part of juries.
9. Weeding out of enforcement officials not in sympathy with enforcement of the eighteenth amendment.
10. Attitude of physicians and druggists against prescription abuses.
11. Action of judicial section of the American Bar Association.
12. Curtailing of sources of supply.

Every unbiased, unprejudiced, observing man and woman in America, if he or she takes the time to do a little investigating and thinking, now admits that remarkable progress is actually being made in the enforcement.

No decent American community long tolerates a nuisance, nor will a patriotic decent citizen tolerate derision and irreverence for any part of the Constitution, which fact the better class of theaters, stage and screen, are beginning to realize, all of which constitutes a hopeful sign and a response to my appeal in my first public announcement.

Nothing has contributed more to awaking public sentiment than the high-handed, unscrupulous methods of those engaging in the nefarious traffic, and the fact that some 14 agents have been assassinated and many wounded during the past year in the performance of their duties has had an electrical effect in crystallizing the sentiment of citizens of all classes to support the Government in enforcement work. The secret of this progress is easily found. It is the spirit of America. It is our American idealism. It is our American militant righteousness. It is our progressive civilization and there is something emanating from this invisible power to the hearts of all true Americans. It may be like the mystic cords of which Mr. Lincoln so eloquently spoke, at least there is an invisible influence that reaches each citizen and makes him a defender of all those laws which have to do with the welfare of our country and the well-being of our countrymen.

The chief cause of nonenforcement was the appointment of wet officials and smuggling. This is being corrected by the appointment of officials who are in sympathy with the law and by serving notice on our neighboring countries that their flags are being used to protect smugglers.

In reply to the charge that prohibition enforcement is costly as well as a failure, I submit the following:

Number of indictments in Federal courts for period July 1, 1921, to December 31, 1921, as shown by incomplete reports received by legal division, 12,702, which further reports will greatly increase.

Fines for liquor violations imposed by Federal courts for period July 1, 1921, to December 31, 1921, as shown by incomplete reports received by legal division, $787,885.47. Reports from all Federal districts will undoubtedly increase the amount of fines to approximately $1,000,000.

This, of course, does not include convictions and fines under State codes. For instance, in Ohio, under the State code, during the year 1921, incomplete reports, with many municipalities missing, show $833,570.20 liquor fines, most of which was collected.

With most States, Territories, and insular possessions having concurrent laws governing liquor violations a conservative estimate makes the total fines approximately $40,000,000.

Estimated amount of Federal assessments and penalties, $50,000,000; $1,000 special tax, $500,000; taxes on spirits, wines, and so forth, $7,000,000; estimated total, $57,500,000.

Estimated seizures: Gallons of distilled spirits and wine, 950,000; estimated value of property seized during the year, not including property levied for payment of taxes, nor distillery apparatus or other property destroyed, $12,907,693.40.

Number of Federal indictments, estimated, 30,000; pleas of guilty, 17,000; number of convictions, 21,000.

During the year 1921 withdrawals of whisky in the United States amounted to less than 3,000,000 gallons, while official records reveal that before the eighteenth amendment became effective the average American yearly consumption of whisky was approximately 183,000,000.

The first six months of present fiscal year there were withdrawn, tax paid, 11,962,322 gallons of nonbeverage spirits. The quantity withdrawn during the first six months of last fiscal year amounted to 22,271,180 gallons, a decrease during this fiscal year of 86 per cent.

The quantity of nonbeverage spirits withdrawn during the month of December, 1921, on which the tax was paid, amounted to 1,329,206 gallons, as compared with 2,625,285 gallons withdrawn in December, 1920, a decrease of approximately 100 per cent. The quantity withdrawn in December, 1921, when compared with the quantity withdrawn in October, 1920, 4,372,127 gallons, shows a decrease of nearly 229 per cent.

During the year 1921 whisky brought into this country from all foreign sources was valued at $1,541,388, while during 1920 whisky from all sources was valued at $1,013,091, representing value of whisky brought into the country and entered into warehouse.

During the year 1921 whisky to the value of $628,600 was withdrawn for consumption, while during the previous year whisky valued at $485,190 was withdrawn for consumption, an increase of about 30,000 gallons, insignificant, and more than accounted for by the forging of permits.

At the end of the year 1921 the amount of 267,962 proof gallons of whisky, valued at $1,211,222, was remaining in the custom warehouses.

The actual amount of whisky withdrawn tax paid from custom warehouses—or consumed—during the year 1921 amounted to 139,689 proof gallons. The value of such whisky, computed at $4.50 per gallon, amounts to $628,600.50.

In addition to the above "facts and figures," the following may also be emphasized as indicating results of enforcement:

Disappearance of the open saloon; abatement of open drinking places in public dining rooms; passing of the treating evil, which was recognized as the greatest contributing agency in the development of a liquor appetite; closing of whisky cure and similar institutions; increased savings accounts; record-breaking Christmas business; decreased drunkenness.

Wholesale drug companies must now have as a minimum a $25,000 drug stock, must be bona fide dealers, and sales of liquor must not exceed 10 per cent of the amount of their gross sales as a drug concern.

All liquor permits authorized for legitimate uses must now bear the signature of the director of the State in which the distillery from which withdrawal is to be made is located.

Last year's importation was one-half of 1 per cent of the total consumption of liquor in America the year before prohibition, arrests for drunkenness were decreased 60 per cent, and liquor withdrawals were reduced 50 per cent.

Only 2 per cent of all liquor seized and examined to-day is fit to drink.

PRIEST GOES AFTER GALLIVAN.

The foregoing avalanche of facts would seem enough to "mash out flat" not only that festive apostle of "wetness," the Hon. JAMES A. GALLIVAN, but to put to a stammering hush that radiant and roaring son of Republican thunder, the Hon. GINGER HOLDEN TINKHAM. Anyway, it is highly interesting to read the following annihilating letter from a "dry" Catholic priest to a "wet" Catholic Congressman. While it is sadly true that Roman Catholic centers like Boston, New York, and Baltimore are terribly and defiantly "wet" it is refreshing to find a long-time Catholic priest like the Rev. George Burcher, president of the Catholic Clergy Prohibition League, flaying Hon. JIMMY GALLIVAN'S "wetness" in such satisfactory fashion. The following letter has been placed in my hands for publication here:

COLUMBUS, IND., February 15, 1922.

To Congressman JAMES A. GALLIVAN:

HONORABLE AND DEAR SIR: Your passionate and partisan tirade against prohibition evinces your sudden fear that a sufficient number of real prohibitionists in the prohibition enforcement units may crown the Volstead Act with lasting success. Your silly claim that the ten millions asked for prohibition enforcement "is to support a pension roll for the most persistent and presumptious grafters that ever appeared before Congress," your assurance that "Mr. NELSON is ready to vote with his colleague, Mr. VOLSTEAD, for any appropriation that will take care of the Anti-Saloon Leaguers who are still waiting to get on the pay roll of the prohibition unit," and your accusing Congress of "appropriating tax money to an army of political pap suckers" are quite consistent with your erstwhile serene complacency while the prohibition unit was largely composed of political heelers, ex-bartenders, and 'suckers," as they were known in the palmy days of the saloon. This large "sucker" element in the prohibition unit buoyed you up with the illusion that prohibition would soon break down. You announce the clearing of "the Augean—I beg pardon, the Anti Saloon League—stable into which this House has been converted." The clearing has begun; and if you have the Irishman's ready wisdom you will heed the warning of some of Napoleon's men at Waterloo: "Sauve qui peut."

Your whining about ten millions being given to the prohibition "monster" shows that you have made the discovery that prohibition has the onward sweep of a monster. Was not the idleness and inefficiency of the former saloon frequenters—"suckers," you would call them—in and out of political office causing the country an annual loss of $200,000,000?

Were not $150,000,000 annually spent in saloons to bribe voters? And were not the bribe givers, elected to office, gagged and bound from head to foot to protect the most persistent, arrogant, defiant, and organized army of lawbreakers that ever infested a nation?

Were not $75,000,000 wasted every year in well-meant but futile efforts to aid town, village, city, county, State, and Federal officials to enforce liquor and Sunday laws?

Did not the saloons, as festering plague spots and brawling nuisances, depreciate neighboring property by hundreds of millions of dollars? What about the billions of dollars' worth of damage inflicted in a thousand ways by the liquor traffic upon the American people, regardless of racial origin, that of your own not in the least excepted?

Are you consciously in earnest when you say, "The records of the courts, etc., deny that prohibition is or can be enforced upon all the people"? Do not the same records deny that the laws prohibiting murder, adultery, theft, blasphemy, gambling, smuggling, "are or can be enforced upon all the people"? Do you mean, perhaps, that our foreigners, who figure so largely in bootlegging, will never submit to prohibition? In this case an effective remedy is available: The Volstead Act should provide that any foreigner convicted of bootlegging should be deported to his own country, and any citizen so convicted should be disfranchised for 10 years. The former is not fit to become an American citizen, and the latter should not be entrusted with civic or political responsibilities.

You have, we believe, publicly defended the Catholic Church against some of her opponents, but do you know that the unutterable corruption of certain Catholic liquor politicians has filled with angry mistrust millions of our non-Catholic fellow citizens, who did not know that the unscrupulous politician never had the sanction of his church while he prostituted his religion to his selfish designs by appealing to Catholic voters for support?

Do you know that predilection for alcohol has been the source of a great deal of poverty, degradation, and crime among our coreligionists, who, when thoroughly sober, are known to be remarkably industrious, trustworthy, and virtuous?

Do you know that Catholic children, pauperized and orphaned through Boston and other eastern saloons, and adopted in so many non-Catholic homes in the far West, are getting scarce under prohibition?

Do you know that it would have been almost impossible for the Catholics of Cincinnati to build the magnificent Fenwick Club while hundreds of saloons in that city were a roaring success as so many poor men's clubs?

Can you not realize that the Catholic Church laid one of the corner stones of the prohibition edifice when she urged through the third council of Baltimore in 1884, "all Catholics engaged in the sale of alcoholic drinks to quit that dangerous traffic as soon as possible, and to make their living in some more honorable way"? Had we Catholics then heeded the appeals of our highest spiritual guides the blessings of prohibition would have come 30 years sooner.

Yours truly,

(Rev.) GEORGE ZURCHER,
President of the Catholic Clergy Prohibition League, and Pastor of St. Vincent's Church, North Evans, N. Y.

(Rev.) C. P. BARON,
Secretary Catholic Clergy Prohibition League, and Pastor St. Bartholomew's Church, Columbus, Ind.

The enforcement of our national prohibition law that touches the happiness of so many millions of American homes should call for the combined efforts of Protestants, Catholics, and Hebrews alike—everybody who loves the American home better than the outlawed American saloon.

The eyes of the world are on America. I feel desperately on this question, and the pathos of the appeal of 38 nations whose representatives recently met here is a challenge to us in this high and ardent hour. They said, in effect, "America, the eyes of the world are upon you. You are the first great nation that has ever attempted a great moral law like this. If you fail, in vain have you loosened the shackles that bind us to military autocracy, for we stagger on to our graves, the slaves of rum and ruin. But if you win, America, we gird up our loins and strike our harps of hope anew. And we will follow the path of America's stainless flag to the glory, thank God, of a sober world." Let America lead the way to the glory of a sober world. [Applause.]

OF
HON. ROYAL C. JOHNSON,
OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, August 5, 1922.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with permission granted by unanimous consent of the House to extend my remarks in the RECORD and print the so-called "slacker list," I desire to call attention to a letter from the Adjutant General's Office, dated July 29, 1922.

It is my intention to insert these lists on the 5th day of each month until all of the names are printed. No good soldier will be injured by the publication of his name in these lists; but, on the contrary, if his military record is one to be proud of, the publication will only serve to call attention to that record. If by mistake the names of good soldiers have not been eliminated from the record, it will be my pleasure and duty to insert in the RECORD the facts in each individual case and to see that the facts are brought to the attention of the Secretary of War, who is as anxious as any soldier of the late war with Germany to have the records correct. Mistakes ought to be corrected while the men are living and while there is evidence to substantiate any valid claim as to service.

The letter is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, July 29, 1922.

Hon. ROYAL C. JOHNSON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. JOHNSON: I have the honor to transmit herewith for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 5, 1922, lists of alleged draft deserters, which lists were released by the War Department for publication between June 5 and July 4, 1922, both dates inclusive. A copy of the statement to be printed at the head of the lists is also herewith.

There is also transmitted herewith for insertion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a list of the names of registrants which have been removed from the lists of alleged draft deserters heretofore published in the RECORD, the reasons for such removals being set forth in the second paragraph of the statement which is to precede the lists in the RECORD.

Very respectfully,

The men whose names appear below and who were under the jurisdiction of the local boards named were, according to the public draft records, classified and reported by the draft authorities as deserters from the military service of the United States. The lists in which these names were originally included have been given at least one month's publicity.

The name of any man who since the publication of the lists has been found to have actually rendered service in either our own forces or in those of the Allies during the period between May 18, 1917, and November 11, 1918, is not included; nor is that of any man who, though he rendered no service during the period mentioned, has, since the publication of his name, been found to have been erroneously inducted or to have been erroneously certified as a deserter, nor that of any man who is known to be no longer living.

Every reasonable effort has been made by the War Department to eliminate from these lists names which, for any of the aforementioned reasons, should not appear thereon. Should it develop, however, that certain of the names listed below should, for any of these reasons, likewise be removed, notice to that effect will be published in each such case in a later issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

OF
HON. JOSEPH W. BYRNS, OF TENNESSEE,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 21, 1922.

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12073) to provide additional compensation for certain civilian employees of the Governments of the United States and the District of Columbia during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, since the fiscal year 1918 the Government has been paying a bonus to certain civilian employees; in fact, all civilian employees who draw less than $2,500 a year. The bonus for 1918 provided for 10 per cent to those who were drawing a salary of less than $1,200 and 5 per cent for those whose salaries were more than $1,200 and less than $2,500. In 1919 a bonus of $120 was paid. That was increased to $240 in 1920, and was paid during the fiscal year 1921 and during the present year of 1922. As we all know, that bonus was provided on account of admittedly great increase in the cost of living and in order, in some measure, to take care of those who were drawing the smaller salaries. It was understood, I think, at the time the first bonus was passed, and later on as each successive bonus was provided, that when conditions became more normal the bonus would be cut off and that some permanent provision would be made for the civilian employees. Such a provision was made for the Post Office and the postal employees, and they are not carried in this bill. But for some reason there has been no permanent classification of the particular employees who are included in this bill.

Gentlemen will remember that for a year promises have been made, and statements have been made and published in the newspapers, that there was going to be a reclassification of the salaries paid in the departments, in order that those receiving the smaller amounts would be put upon a more equitable and a fairer basis and would be paid in accordance with the value of the work that was being rendered. For several months that bill remained in the Committee of the House. It was finally reported out and it passed the House December 15, but for more than six months that bill has been at the other end of the Capitol, and, so far as I know, no action has been taken upon it except a mere reference to a committee.

As has been stated repeatedly, if that reclassification bill had been passed and a reclassification of the civil employees of the departments had taken place, this bonus bill would not be necessary. Those employees who are drawing the smaller salaries would be provided for in an equitable manner, and all employees would have been put upon a permanent basis and would not have to depend upon an unscientific and unbusinesslike manner of increasing their salaries by way of a bonus to those who were getting under $2,500 a year.

I do not know why that bill has not become a law, but certain it is that we are confronted now with a bonus bill because this Congress has failed to keep its promise, has failed to enact a measure which the civil-service employees of the Government were led to expect. As I have said, for six months that bill has been at the other end of the Capitol and no action taken upon it. For months it was here in the committee before action was taken upon it by the House, and if the Senate had acted promptly when that bill was sent over, even as late as last December, and it had passed, the reclassification would have taken place and we would not now be called upon to vote more than $37,000,000 out of the Treasury by way of a bonus, and the civil-service employees of the departments would have been properly and satisfactorily taken care of under that reclassification. I favored the first bonus. In fact, it was reported to this House upon a bill which I happened at that time to have in charge, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

But in my judgment we have come to a time when Congress should quit voting bonus for any class of employees in the Government, and for that reason, much as I appreciate the force and logic of what is said in regard to the necessity for this bonus, I can not give my support to this particular bill. It has been nearly four years since the war closed. The taxpayers are receiving no bonus but are being burdened to pay these sums which Congress is voting out of their Treasury, and, as I say, I think the time has come when a halt must be made, much as I would like personally to support this bill.

I agree with the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Texas that it would be for the best interest of the civil-service employees for this bill to be defeated, for it would undoubtedly force the Senate to act upon the reclassification bill, for the civil-service employees would thus obtain a modicum of the consideration they are asking for sooner than they will if we pass this piecemeal bonus, which is admittedly unscientific and unbusinesslike. For that reason, and because we are confronted with a deficit now overwhelming in its proportion, and because I have taken the position during all of this session against every kind of bonus for any class of citizens I do not feel, in justice to myself and my views in regard to the condition of the Treasury, and in justice to the taxpayers of this country, I can continue to vote for a bonus.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman referred to the reclassification bill. Is it not a fact that under the reclassification bill, if enacted into law, that would not affect the salaries of the employees of the Government for the next fiscal year?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is true of the bill as it passed the House. I think as it passed the House it had a provision that salaries should go into effect during the fiscal year succeeding the time in which they were submitted in the Budget.

Mr. MANN. This bill refers only to the salaries for the next fiscal year, does it not?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is true.

Mr. MANN. And this would not in any way be affected by the passage of the reclassification bill?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is true, unless the Senate should change that provision.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman said they had not acted upon it. It was hardly fair to assume it is going to be changed in the Senate.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the bill becomes a law after July it could be changed so as to go into effect at once.

Mr. MANN. In any case, if it became a law after July 1, would it affect the salaries during the next fiscal year?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I submit to the gentleman the Senate has been known to amend these bills.

Mr. MANN. It is a matter of pure imagination as to what the Senate may do. The gentleman considers the bill as it passed the House, and it has not been changed by the Senate. If there is any reason for the bonus for the next fiscal year, that would not be affected by the passage of the reclassification bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Not as it passed the House. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right in that connection?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In a moment. The reclassification bill, as I said, passed the House on December 15 last. There is no reason why the Senate can not amend that provision and make it effective earlier than the succeeding fiscal year, and the point I am making is that if it had been passed promptly after it was sent to the other end of the Capitol and a proper provision put upon it with respect to the time at which it would go into effect, we would not be confronted with this bonus provision here and be called upon to vote possibly $40,000,000 in this unscientific way.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Even if the Senate should eliminate section 16, which disposes of salaries for the fiscal year 1924, nevertheless the putting into effect of the revised schedule and the allocating of the various positions of employees to their respective grades and classes would physically be the work of months, and your classification could not be made effective for those months, even if your bill went into effect at once, and therefore the need of a bonus as proposed here does not depend on the reclassification bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Well, if it takes the commission as long to reclassify salaries as it has taken Congress to pass and dispose of the reclassification bill, I admit that this bonus proposition would not be affected by the enactment of the reclassification bill. But I can see no reason why, if the reclassification bill is passed promptly and a reclassification commission took up the work promptly, there should be any need for the enactment of this bonus bill.

Mr. LEHLBACH. It is simply because there are over 600,000 positions to be considered.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. We could do that, because we are told that the urgent reason for passing this bonus bill is the demand for increased compensation of the lower-salaried employees in the classified service. They ought to be first considered in any reclassification.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The reclassification, it should be remembered, applies to the field as well as to the departments in Washington.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes. It applies to all except the postal employees.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman from Tennessee seems to be complaining because the reclassification bill has not been enacted into law. I would like to inquire of the gentleman if he voted for that bill?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I did not, and I will tell the gentleman why I did not. I regarded it as a bill which chiefly took care of those who were already in receipt of the higher grades of salaries, and because it did not, in my judgment, properly take care of the employees who received the lower grades of salaries.

Mr. BEGG. But the gentleman says he is not going to vote for this bonus bill, and this bonus bill gives the best end of it to the fellow drawing the lower grade of salary. This bonus bill does that. Why is not the gentleman in favor of it?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This is not the scientific or businesslike way to do it. The point I make is that we have come to the time when, in the interest of the taxpayers and in the interest of the Treasury, which is now threatened with a deficit of many hundreds of millions of dollars, we should stop the voting of bonuses, and if this Congress had carried out its promise and complied with its pledge we would not now be called upon to pass this bonus bill, because there would have been a permanent reclassification, without many of the injustices and inequalities that arise from legislation of this kind.

Mr. BEGG. I do not see how that statement will let the gentleman out. The gentleman says in one breath that he is in favor of an increase of compensation for the lower salaried employee, and then he says in the next breath that he is opposed to this bonus bill when it is in favor of the lower salaried men.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have taken a consistent position in this Congress that I will not vote for a bonus for any class of employees or for any class of our citizenship. Proper salaries should be provided, and if increases are necessary they should be granted by permanent legislation and not in this slipshod, temporary way. I am opposed to it for the additional reason that the farmers back home do not get the bonus that the gentleman from Ohio is going to vote for those who are in the civil service here.

The laborer in the district which the gentleman from Ohio represents does not get the bonus, which, I presume, the gentleman proposes to vote out of their pockets into the pockets of those on the salary roll here, and yet I dare say that many of those laborers, many of those farmers whom the gentleman so ably represents, would like very much to have one of these positions if they were so fortunate as to have the gentleman's indorsement for appointment to it.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. I would like to inform the gentleman that now, since the Republican Party has been in power for a year, the farmers are in a much better condition than they were the year before, under the administration of the gentleman's party, and they do not need a bonus now.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. We will not discuss that now. I have always understood that the gentleman was a very optimistic Member of the House.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The gentleman stated that this bill would involve an expenditure of $37,000,000. Suppose that the reclassification bill had been passed; how much money would have had to be appropriated to meet the plans of that reclassification?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I can not say, but the theory of the reclassification bill, as I recall, was that it was going to reduce the number of positions. It was going to raise the salaries of a number of the lower-salaried employees to a higher salary, but at the same time it would serve to cut out and eliminate many useless positions in the departments, and, if I recall aright, those who favored it insisted that it would not involve any particular extra expense to the Government.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I understood it would involve a very considerable additional expense.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I realize that the Government employees are not responsible for the inaction of Congress. I realize the injustice that has come to some of them because of the failure of Congress to take the action that it ought to have taken; but I repeat, I do not believe that this Congress, judging by its past action, will pass that reclassification bill and put it upon the statute books at any early date unless we cut off this bonus and put pressure upon the members of the committee at the other end of the Capitol so that they will take it up.

OF
HON. ROYAL C. JOHNSON,
OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, September 5, 1922.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with permission granted by unanimous consent of the House to extend my remarks in the RECORD and print the so-called "slacker lists," I desire to call attention to a letter from The Adjutant General's office, dated August 30, 1922.

It is my intention to insert these lists on the 5th day of each month until all of the names are printed. No good soldier will be injured by the publication of his name in these lists; but, on the contrary, if his military record is one to be proud of, the publication will only serve to call attention to that record. If by mistake the names of good soldiers have not been eliminated from the record, it will be my pleasure and duty to insert in the RECORD the facts in each individual case and to see that the facts are brought to the attention of the Secretary of War, who is as anxious as any soldier of the late war with Germany to have the records correct. Mistakes ought to be corrected while the men are living and while there is evidence to substantiate any valid claim as to service.

The letter is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,

The Tariff—Dye Embargo.

OF
HON. WILLIAM H. KING, OF UTAH,

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,

Friday, July 14 (legislative day of April 20), 1922.

The Senate had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the able Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] has eloquently presented his views of the provision of the pending bill, which places an embargo upon all dyes as well as upon various chemicals, drugs, medicines and pharmaceuticals, and synthetic organic chemical compounds. The Senator is not satisfied with the high tariff rates which are found in the bill under consideration and which will give to the dye producers of the United States a practical monopoly of dyestuffs; but he and those who are advocating the embargo provisions of the bill demand legislation which will prohibit the importation of dyes, so important in our textile industry, also various chemical products, and thousands of drugs, medicines, pharmaceuticals, and synthetic organic chemical compounds. I doubt whether there can be found in the history of tariff legislation from the beginning of our history until the present time a situation analogous to the one before us. We have had high tariff men in the United States and representatives of corporations and trusts who sought legislation that would give them absolute control of the domestic market, but they have never had the temerity or audacity to demand embargoes in order that they might more effectually rob and plunder the American people. An embargo is a hateful thing. It is un-American. It means the triumph of greed and the adoption of a policy of spoliation and robbery. It means that those in whose behalf embargoes are secured are not satisfied with legitimate profits in business but demand unrestricted license to plunder their unfortunate victims.

It has often been charged that schedules in many of the tariff bills were written by trusts and predatory interests. These charges in many instances have been sustained. It has been established that many of the most oppressive and ugly provisions of tariff bills have been the result of propaganda, lobbying, and sinister, if not corrupt, methods, but I doubt whether there has ever been such a protracted, persistent, sinister, malign, audacious, indecent, if not corrupt, propaganda to secure legislation as that which has been carried on by certain corporations and interests for more than two years for the purpose of securing an embargo upon dyes and various drugs, medicines, and chemical products.

Immediately following the war the Du Pont Co. and other corporations and various interests and organizations and individuals began a campaign to secure an embargo which would prohibit the importation of dyes and all forms of synthetic organic chemical compounds. I have not time to detail the sinuous and intriguing methods employed to accomplish this end. They succeeded in attaching to the emergency tariff bill an embargo provision which is still in force.

I have stated heretofore, and have no reason to doubt the accuracy of the statement made, that many Senators and Representatives were not aware of the comprehensive character of the embargo provisions contained in the emergency tariff bill. They supposed that the embargo related solely to dyes. They did not know that it embraced thousands of drugs, medicines, and chemical compounds and products. They did not realize that they were putting it into the power of corporations and organizations, some of which are trusts, to exploit the people and to compel them to pay for dyes and for thousands of drugs and medicines prices three or four hundred per cent, and, indeed, in some instances more than 1,000 per cent, above those which obtained prior to the war. Before concluding my remarks I shall call attention to some of these corporations and to the vast sums which they control and assets which they possess, which have been active in promoting this un-American, dangerous, and vicious legislation.

The propaganda to which I have referred has continued undiminished in force and with increased effrontery and brazenness. It has penetrated every State, attempted to influence every community, and corrupt every avenue of public thought. It has found lodgment in schools and colleges and has influenced various organizations of a civic, eleemosynary, philanthropic, patriotic, and educational character. It has spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in this propaganda and in lobbying before Congress to secure and perpetuate prohibitory tariffs and embargoes behind which corporations, trusts, and combinations in restraint of trade might take refuge and without restriction rob and plunder the American people. So powerful have been the influences of these corporations and so adroit and subtle have been their operations that they have succeeded in developing considerable sentiment in favor of their iniquitous scheme. They have been powerful enough to have inserted in the pending bill a provision to perpetuate for a considerable period the embargo provisions of the emergency tariff bill. I had thought, when the indefensibly high tariff rates that will enable the domestic manufacturers of dyes and various other chemical and medicinal compounds to charge extortionate prices for their products were written into this bill, that the lobbyists and representatives of the manufacturing interests who demanded the embargo provisions found in the emergency tariff bill, would call off their legions and emissaries and be satisfied with the monopoly which those rates provide.

But I discover that I credited the dye monopolists with a little more mercy and humanity than it is evident they possess. So arrogant have they become and so flushed with pride because of the victory won that they are pressing forward with greater vigor and with a truculence that finds no parallel.

By common consent it is agreed that the pending tariff bill is the most oppressive of any that was ever presented to an American Congress. Its rates are so high as to shock the conscience even of "hard-boiled" and reactionary Republicans. But bad as the bill is, indefensible as its schedules are, the most revolting and shocking provisions of the bill are those dealing with dyes, chemicals, and their allied products, medicines, drugs, and pharmaceuticals, particularly as those provisions are embodied in the embargo features of the bill.

I have been astounded at the bold and defiant attitude of the lobbyists and representatives of these interests who are pushing this embargo legislation. I have been surprised to find the number of supporters that this legislation has secured. I have been amazed to find patriotic and able Senators defending legislation which will give to corporations such as the Du Pont Co., the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation, and others possessing hundreds of millions of capital power to exploit the American people and to compel them to pay for dyes, drugs, and medicines prices that all will concede are extortionate. I have been unable to comprehend how fair-minded men could be won over to the support of an embargo upon the multitudinous products covered by the provisions of this bill upon the hysterical and altogether groundless contention that in the interests of "national defense" the demands of the dye monopoly and certain chemical interests for prohibitive tariff legislation should be enacted.

The Senator from New Jersey, in the speech which he has just delivered, as well as in other speeches upon the embargo question, has justified this legislation upon the ground of "national defense." He has to-day in eloquent and graphic language directed attention to the use of poisonous gases by Germany and has sought to convey the idea that unless an embargo is granted, in some way and in some manner not indicated by the Senator, the safety of our Nation and its people is imperiled. An appeal to the patriotism of the people will always find a ready response in this Republic. The lobbyists for the dye monopoly and the many representatives sent by the organizations back of this embargo proposition understand this phase of American character, and they have sung the same song in all parts of the United States in their addresses before colleges and civic clubs and medical and chemical and other organizations, as well as before patriotic associations, and they have attempted to arouse the American people in behalf of the embargo by calling attention to the military successes of Germany and to the use of poisonous gases in her military operations.

The propaganda to which I have referred disparaged American chemists and the achievements of Americans in the fields of organic chemistry. Germany was given the crown of primacy and pictured as a devouring Frankenstein. Every possible effort was made to frighten the American people into the belief that the United States was wholly incompetent to meet Germany in the chemical field or to cope with her in inventions and in the application of the discoveries and inventions of this remarkable age of scientific development. The fact is that we have chemists in the United States of equal if not superior ability to those found in Germany or in any other country, and that with our inexhaustible resources it is impossible for Germany to compete with the United States in any of the fields of applied chemistry or applied physical science. The campaign conducted by these selfish and greedy corporations and their tools and allies has been willfully misleading and has been pernicious in its effects.

Earlier in the discussion of the chemical schedule the Senator from New Jersey made practically the same speech as that just delivered by him dealing with the question of "preparedness" and the importance of an embargo in order that our Nation may be put in a position of "military preparedness." He has added nothing new to-day. However, in view of the fact that he has stressed this point, I feel constrained to refer to some matters to which I directed the Senate's attention when I replied to the speech of the Senator. I referred to an address made by Doctor Reese, who was at the time, and still is so far as I am advised, a director in the E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co.

Senators will recall that before the United States entered the war there was considerable discussion as to the advantage which Germany was supposed to have because of her development along chemical lines. Doctor Reese, in the address referred to, which was delivered by him at a convention in May, 1918, considered this point in the following language, which, without reading, I ask permission to insert in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Following is the matter referred to:

There has also been much talk in the papers with regard to the wonderful advantage Germany had on account of her extensive dye industry, in that she could immediately turn all the great dye plants into munition factories.

I do not consider that the presence of the factories themselves was a matter of very great importance to the Germans. It might have been an important factor in a small war, but the requirements for this great war have been such that their mere existence must have been a very small factor.

However, the real assistance that Germany obtained from the existence of these factories came from the chemical organizations which they maintained. As this war has become, in a sense, a chemical war, these chemical organizations in the German factories have been able to assist the Government very materially in its prosecution.

Now, what were the conditions in this country? There was no dye industry of any great magnitude, but there was a well-organized explosive industry with a well-organized chemical organization. I might say that at the beginning of the war the Du Pont Co. had in the neighborhood of 400 chemists in their employ, many of whom were functioning along the lines above indicated.

The first effect of the Great War was to call upon this organization to meet problems which seemed to be almost as unsolvable as those presented by the dye situation, since many of the raw materials necessary for the manufacture of munitions had been secured from Europe, just as the dyes had been.

This organization, however, was able to meet the situation in such a short time that the want of these materials did not occasion a day's delay in the production of powder. One of these materials, diphenylamine, which is an intermediate in the manufacture of dyestuffs, was produced on a large scale, and three separate and distinct processes were developed for its production. Dimethylaniline, another dye intermediate, was necessary for the production of tetranitromethylaniline, commonly called tetryl, and had to be produced, and a satisfactory process for its production was developed in ample time, as well as for the production of tetryl.

These accomplishments gave courage and confidence to the chemists of the Du Pont Co., and from the fact that this organization was manufacturing and using all of the basic raw materials necessary for the manufacture of dyes—namely, sulphuric acid, nitric acid, benzol, toluol, xylol, naphthalene, nitrobenzol, aniline, and picric acid—it was perfectly natural to consider the possibility of entering this great industry.

EXCERPT FROM UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE REPORT FOR OCTOBER, 1920.

With the return of peace it is evident that whatever the demand for dyes made in Germany may be, that country will never regain its lost supremacy in the world trade in dyestuffs. * * * The United States has abundant coal to supply the raw materials for making aniline dyes. Private capital has been supplied as fast as it could be utilized in establishing scores of factories and in training skilled operatives and chemists for actual and experimental work on a large scale. There has been an increasing tendency since 1916 to centralize or consolidate the domestic enterprises in order to cut overhead expense, utilize all by-products, and reduce the price of finished dyes. This has not only increased production but has developed the foreign trade, as shown by the wide distribution of American aniline dyes exported in the calendar years of 1918 and 1919. * * * The world-wide shortage of dyestuffs and the growing demand for both quality and variety of such materials offer every opportunity to extend the foreign market for American colors. * * * Germany, it is now conceded, will not be the strenuous competitor she was formerly in the foreign trade. Switzerland is the only country, other than the United States, now making aniline colors sufficient to meet its own requirements and able to export on a large scale, and the Swiss are dependent on other countries for the raw materials.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I offer for the RECORD a statement made by Dr. B. C. Hesse, an eminent American chemist who was chairman of a committee of the American Chemical Society in 1916, before the Franklin Institute on November 6, 1919. Doctor Hesse states that—

The discovery of new synthetic remedies is properly the function of the many medical institutes—

Senators will see that he emphasizes that medical institutes and not dye factories are the establishments that will be pro-motive of a chemical industry which may be of advantage in war times—

and schools of research in this country. They can be manufactured by our organic and fine chemical industry, helped out by our large pharmaceutical factories, and distributed by the latter. Synthetic flavors and perfumes have for years been successfully made here at a number of establishments, and they have also conducted much of the research in this field. There is no reason, compelling or otherwise, why the struggling dye makers should share their work. In the manufacture of toxic and like gases for military purposes, whose invention and development belong to the Chemical Warfare Service, the largest single material involved, and at the same time the one most difficult to transport, is chlorine, which in 1914 was normally made in 23 different factories in this country and in an amount approximating 65,000 tons annually, while during the war we made a total of but 12,000 tons of toxic-gas war materials. Their manufacture, therefore, should be linked up with our going chlorine industry.

The coal-tar materials needed in any or all of these arts of peace are and have been obtainable, if we only wanted them, in any needful quantity and quality, without in any way calling upon the dye maker for them, their total requirement being under 300 tons per year. For each of these important collateral developments we have domestic industrial points of attachment and growth of long and firmly-established competitive ability. Would it not be the very height of folly to ignore them and to stake our entire future in these fields wholly upon the dye industry, whose future with us is by no means established? I am thoroughly convinced that no one can seriously or for long take any other view than the foregoing. We can surely have all of these other industries in the highest possible state of efficiency if we only will, whether we have a dye industry or not. That we should have our own supply of dyes is the only reason for having a domestic dye industry. The war itself proved that conclusively and beyond question.

As I have indicated, the argument made by the Senator from New Jersey is that it is imperative that dye-manufacturing plants be established in the United States in order that poisonous gases may be produced for the defense of the Nation, and that these plants can not be successfully operated without an embargo. The fact is, so all know who investigate the matter, that dye plants are not indispensable in the production of noxious gases, and it is also a fact that the quantity of poisonous gases employed in extensive military operations would not require elaborate dye manufacturing plants. As stated by Doctor Hesse, the toxic gases employed in military operations were known in the United States before the war, and chlorine, "the largest single material involved in the production of poisonous gases," was manufactured in 23 different factories in the United States in an amount approximating 65,000 tons annually. And yet during the war when we were producing "enormous quantities of toxic gas and war materials, we only required 12,000 tons." As Doctor Hesse says, the manufacture of toxic gases should be "linked up with our going chlorine industry."

Lieut. Col. Earl J. W. Ragsdale, who was for 10 years in the Regular Army and in the Ordnance Department, testified before the Finance Committee in August of last year. His testimony appears in the hearings of that committee under the head of Dyes Embargo, beginning on page 750. I shall not take the time to read all of his testimony, but will call attention to a few sentences which I think are pertinent to the question under consideration. Mr. President, I ask leave to insert certain parts of his testimony in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it will be so ordered.

Mr. KING. Colonel Ragsdale stated that in 1915 General Crozier, Chief of Ordnance, made him an assistant, and one of his first duties was to study new weapons developed during the war, including poison gases. He further stated that he had made a study of chemicals employed and made a tentative survey of the chemical industry of the United States. He also testified that the War Department utilized various Government agencies, including the Bureau of Mines, and added that—

One thing which impressed me was that we did have a chemical industry in which we could take pride and upon which the War Department could rely. * * * I found upon slight investigation that reference was made to the dyestuffs industry. There were very few plants in this country which were equipped to make dyestuffs. On the other hand, our general chemical industry was very capable. I found at Niagara Falls a chlorine capacity which surely was greater than that of England; I found one plant there, the Hooker plant, with a capacity of 40 tons of chlorine a day. There were two other chlorine plants operating. I also found a process there which, to my mind, now equals or is better than any other process of manufacturing chlorine in existence. So my original apprehension about the manufacture of chlorine was not borne out by the evidence brought in. It is interesting also to note that we did not use any of this capacity.

This officer testified that the reason was transportation and it was considered better policy to concentrate the manufacture of poison gas in one location, where it would be under military control. He further testified that the advantage of this was borne out during the war when a centralized plant was built at Edgewood under his direction. Senators will perceive that the military authorities of our own Government did not resort to the dye plants of the United States for aid or for the production of poisonous gases, but consulted with the chemical industry generally and with the chemists of the United States, and then built a plant and manufactured all the poisonous gases required by the United States, and also supplied various kinds to some of the allied nations.

We are all familiar with the fact that within a very short time after the United States entered the war we were producing toxic gases for use upon the battle fields of Europe in quantities in excess of that required by the American troops, and we were supplying large quantities to our allies. The Edgewood plant was speedily completed and the poisonous gases manufactured by the Government were prepared at that plant. Speaking of the Edgewood plant, Lieutenant Colonel Ragsdale says:

It is interesting to note what our plans were at Edgewood Arsenal and how they compared to the capacities of the other nations. My original plan was for 300 tons of chlorine a day. The Secretary of War cut this to 125 tons of chlorine a day. This plant was built for that capacity.

Another plant had a capacity of 40 tons of phosgene. The complete capacity was never realized, although I understand that 25 tons could be produced.

This officers further proceeds:

As I look back over my organization of those chemists who were personally in charge of the producing units and under whose direction the various materials were manufactured, I do not recall the name of a single one who was associated with the dyestuff industry in this country. The chemists who had the greatest responsibility were recruited from the educational institutions and from the large chemical manufacturers, such as the Du Ponts, Semet-Solvay, and a number at Niagara Falls.

I have been noting in the newspapers the comments which the facts before this committee have provoked and contrasting some of the statements with the conditions I found.

The chemical plant at Niagara Falls which produced phosgene did so under compulsion, true, not physical but moral. * * *

The Semet-Solvay Co., after looking into the matter, flatly refused to manufacture either phosgene or chloropicrin.

The Stanford Synthetic Color Co. was in a bad financial way and undertook to manufacture chloropicrin. Officers from my office had to be sent there to not only take charge of the plant but to work out the process.

If chemical warfare had opened up to our young dyestuff industry such a wonderful vision as now appears, I should have expected a more willing cooperation. * * *

As for the dyestuff industry being regarded as a potential military strength, it unquestionably is. No more so, however, than the entire chemical industry of the United States. This industry has thriven in the past and was very strong when we entered the war.

This officer further testified that the program for toxic gases contemplated the production of gases that would equal Germany, plus that of France and England. He further stated that his section of the War Department prepared plans for the manufacture of chloropicrin and that the majority of the technical information employed in the production of toxic gases came from officers associated with the chemical industry and educational institutions of the United States. Further testifying, this officer said:

I would not assume that the inventor of the keynote of chemical warfare would come from the dye industry any more than he would come from—well, the tannery interests or something else. I think the chances are more likely that he would come from an educational institution, which, of course, is again dependent upon the general chemical needs of the country, because if we have no needs for chemists we will have no chemical institutions. * * *

Speaking of pre-war existence of potential gas plants, he stated that—

The Hooker plant at Niagara was built a good many years before we went into the war.

The witness stated that the chemical forces "engaged in the dye industry would probably be valuable in time of warfare, but there is no reason to suppose that they will be more valuable than chemical organizations engaged in other lines."

The witness further proceeds:

If there were given to my control funds to subsidize industries for their potential military strength, I would certainly be subjected to severe criticism if I placed it in any one phase of the chemical industry, be it dyestuff, be it sugar, be it any other thing. It is quite conceivable that the by-product of sugar manufacturing or some other manufacture may be the raw material from which this key gas * * * is ultimately derived.

Speaking of the formulæ for the poisonous gases used by America in the war, the witness stated that—

The two gases used most largely, being phosgene and chloropicrin, were used by the Germans, and phosgene and chloropicrin were known, although sparingly known, in this country; and then it devolved upon us to work out a process for the manufacture of these in the United States.

During the course of the witness's examination, Senator La Follette asked this question:

May I ask your opinion of this statement? Doctor Reese, director of the E. I. du Pont Co., said before the annual convention of the Cotton Manufacturers' Association, May, 1918:

"There has also been much talk in the papers with regard to the wonderful advantage Germany had on account of her extensive dye industry, in that she could immediately turn all the great dye plants into munition factories.

"I do not consider that the presence of the factories themselves was a matter of very great importance to the Germans. It might have been an important factor in a small war, but the requirements for this great war have been such that their mere existence have been a very small factor."

What do you think of that statement?

Mr. Ragsdale. I could not very well contradict it, because it was practically the argument on which I based my request to have funds appropriated for the Edgewood Arsenal, that even the chemical industries of this country were not adequate to take care of the enormous needs for chemicals as I then foresaw them; and I think that was unquestionably true of Germany, although Germany did more intensive developing in an industrial way than we did. What I mean is, with the capacity for minuteness that the Germans unquestionably have, they could go into a garage and make munitions. We are not psychologically so situated; when we want to make munitions we have to have the proper plant and appliances, and we have to do it right. So that in Germany I think they utilized their small plants to far greater advantage than we did.

The effect of the testimony of this able officer is that while the chemists employed in the dye industry, as all other chemists in the country, might be of service in the production of poisonous gases in the event of war, the dye industry per se is wholly unimportant as a means of national defense, and that the future development of the chemical industry, so far as that industry relates to the national defense, rests with educational institutions rather than with the dye industry.

Notwithstanding the fact that there were a number of dye plants in the United States when we entered the war, they were not utilized in the production of toxic gases; nor for that matter were the various chemical plants, some of which compared in size and in efficiency of production with the greatest chemical plants of Germany, used for national defense or for the production of poisonous gases. The Government quickly constructed its own plant and manufactured not only all gases needed by the armies of the United States but also supplied large quantities to the allied nations. The attempt to connect the dye industry with national preparedness is not only absurd and hypocritical and shows the desperate straits to which the dye monopolists and their lobbyists are driven in their frenzied efforts to put into the hands of a few corporations the absolute control of the manufacture and sale of dyes in the United States as well as thousands of medicines and drugs and synthetic organic compounds.

One of the ablest as well as one of the fairest witnesses who testified before the Finance Committee of the Senate in relation to dyes and embargo legislation was Mr. Grenville S. MacFarland, of Boston, Mass. His testimony appears in the record of the hearings, pages 451 to 459. Speaking of the arguments that the dye industry is important as a means of national defense, Mr. MacFarland stated that the steel industry and all other products of iron were far more necessary; that the textile mills producing blankets and uniforms, including the production of cotton and wool, were more necessary. He further stated that the three or four thousand mills and plants and machine shops that were employed in the production of military equipment were more necessary than the dye plants. The following appears in his testimony:

I believe you will find if you read Crowell's book on the history of the production of munitions, that at least 1,000 or 1,500 of the plants of this country have no relation whatsoever to dyes in their ordinary peace functioning; are better equipped, are nearer the ability to be altered for the purpose of producing war equipment than the dyestuff industry.

One of the reasons that the Assistant Secretary of War said that the dyestuff industry was not able, was not willing, to produce the gases was that the alteration was necessarily so great that they could not be in use after the war. Another reason given by one of the military gentlemen and confirmed by Mr. Crowell was that the gases and the explosives were so dangerous to make in their last process—that is, the process which went beyond the step taken in the commercial development of dyes—that they were not willing to undertake it. That is confirmed by Doctor Reese. Doctor Reese was, and, in fact, I think is now, the chief chemist of the Du Pont company. The Du Pont company, I think you know, is the chief actor in this dye embargo campaign. In a public address in 1918 Doctor Reese said that the idea that the German dye plants—mind you, dye plants; he did not use the words dye and chemical interchangeably—were the kingbolt of the German military enterprise was ridiculous. He said the German dye plants might have helped in a little war, but in a big war such as this they were utterly insignificant. It is a fact that a German dye plant, the biggest they have, could not produce gas enough to sustain one gas attack for a single day.

Doctor Hesse—I think I pronounce the name correctly—is or was the chief chemist of one of the largest chemical concerns in this country, the Allied Chemial & Dye Co. In 1919, and a year after Doctor Reese made his startling confession, as it must have been to the Du Pont company, in a public address before the Franklin Institute, he said that it was all nonsense to talk about relying upon our dye industry to make explosives or gas; that they could not do it; that they were not equipped for it. It required Government experts to do the testing, that the commercial companies could not afford and would not do the testing, the refined investigations and experiments necessary to produce these gases and new gases; that it was all nonsense, and that the production of explosives must remain with explosive companies.

In answer to a question propounded by Senator McCumber, Mr. MacFarland stated that his position was that the influence of that feature of chemistry dealing with gases, is but little related to the production of dyes and that gases are manufactured for the most part from other chemicals than those employed in the manufacture of dyes. Further testifying, Mr. MacFarland stated:

The importance of gas has been very much exaggerated. That is perhaps an immodest thing for a layman to say, but I submit to you the facts will show in your lay minds, also, that I am not speaking in an exaggerated way.

Only 730 men were killed on our side out of the 70,000 who fell and died by gas; only 730. The gas mask is so perfect a defense that Mr. Crowell, in his book, and I think General Sibert, also, said that death or even injury by gas is inexcusable if the men are properly trained and are careful in the habit of putting their gas masks on at the right time.

Senators will also recall the action of the Conference on the Limitation of Armament, at which a treaty between the United States, the British Empire, France, Italy, and Japan was negotiated which declared that the object of the treaty was to make more effective the rules adopted by civilized nations for the protection of the lives of neutrals and noncombatants at sea in time of war and to prevent the use in war of noxious gases and chemicals. Section 5 of this treaty reads as follows:

The use in war of asphyxiating, poisonous, or other gases, and all analogous liquids, materials, or devices, having been justly condemned by the general opinion of the civilized world and a prohibition of such use having been declared in treaties to which a majority of the civilized powers are parties,

The signatory powers, to the end that this prohibition shall be universally accepted as a part of international law, binding alike the conscience and practice of nations, declare their assent to such prohibition, agree to be bound thereby as between themselves, and invite all other civilized nations to adhere thereto.

By the provisions of Article VII of the treaty the United States was required to transmit to all nonsignatory powers a copy of the treaty and invite their adherence thereto. Undoubtedly the countries belonging to the League of Nations will adhere to these provisions respecting poisonous gases, and it is not too much to say that the use of poisonous gases in military operations will soon end.

It seems manifest that all this patriotic ebullition about national preparedness and the imperative necessity of the dye industry, in order to prepare the Nation for war, is a miserable pretense and a smoke screen, behind which the dye lobbyists are conducting a "poison gas" campaign.

Mr President, I now proceed to another phase of the subject before us. I hope that Senators will keep before them the fact that several weeks ago, when the chemical schedule was directly before the Senate, paragraphs 25 and 26 were adopted. The tariff rates provided in these paragraphs are so high as to afford domestic producers of dyes, coal-tar products, and synthetic-organic products a monopoly in the domestic market. In other words, the dye interests were successful in writing into the bill rates so high as to prevent any foreign competition, thus enabling the American manufacturer to exploit the textile interests of the United States and the American people who are compelled to buy medicines and drugs and thousands of articles produced by the combinations and trusts integrated with and constituting a part of the interests controlling the dye business of the United States.

The proposition before the Senate now is to supplement the provisions granting almost prohibitive tariff rates by an embargo against all foreign dyes as well as medicines, drugs, and thousands of chemical compounds. There is no justification for the plea that the dye industry needs an embargo in view of the provisions found in paragraphs 25 and 26; and even if the manufacturers of dyes in the United States needed an embargo against the importation of dyestuffs, there can be no reason for the demand that camphor and phenacetine and thousands of drugs and medicines needed by the people, and various kinds of synthetic-chemical compounds, should be denied importation and the American consumer be placed at the mercy of a greedy and oppressive monopoly.

The American dye industry is not an infant industry; it is not an experimental enterprise. We have the largest and most modern dye-manufacturing plants in the world. The industry is permanently established in this country. It has a productive capacity which in quantity is double the current requirements of the American market, and the American market for dyes is the best market in the world.

The American dye industry, with respect to the American market, enjoys a preferential position, both because of proximity to the market and of protective duties against the competition of foreign dyes in the market, so that we may know with certainty that the American dye makers will retain their privileged position in the American market against all possible foreign competition.

The growth of the dye industry in the United States since 1914 has been nothing less than phenomenal. In 1914 the domestic dye production was 6,619,729 pounds. In 1920 the domestic dye production was 88,263,776 pounds. The value of the domestic dye production in 1914 was $2,470,096. In 1920 the value of the domestic dye production was $95,613,749. In 1914 the value of our dye exports was $356,919. In 1920 the value of our dye exports was $29,823,591.

I ought to say in passing, however, that prices were perhaps between three and four hundred per cent higher in 1920 than they were in 1914, but the poundage increased from approximately 3,000,000 to in the neighborhood of 65,000,000 to 88,000,000 pounds. Our imports of foreign dyes in 1914 were 42,229,736 pounds. In 1920 our imports of foreign dyes were 3,402,582 pounds.

The American dye manfacturer now has a market for his dyes which is wider than the American market. The time will never come again when we will have a balance of imports of dyes into this country. We will always have a balance of dye exports. The tariff can only assure the American dye maker the great preponderance of the domestic dye trade, and this the domestic dye maker already enjoys. No tariff legislation and, indeed, no legislation whatever which Congress can enact can give the American dye maker a wider market than he now enjoys. There is no reason for apprehension or anxiety, and especially not for the emotional hysteria which is being so freely displayed by the great dye trusts, combinations, and corporations as to the future of the industry in this country.

A great deal of this is mere affectation, and is assumed by cold-blooded manipulators to affect public opinion, upon the assumption that the people, in a great democratic country will respond to these affected, hysterical appeals. One of the stock methods of appealing to the emotions of the people is to hold up the specter of another German war, as if the importation of a few German dyes would prostrate the country as far as our national defenses are concerned. German dyes are the most innocuous things that ever came out of Germany. Our current imports of dyes amount to only about 9 per cent of our domestic requirements, and of these only about half of the total importations, or less than 5 per cent of our requirements are of German dyes. The other half is imported from Switzerland, with some contributions from England and France.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator repeat the proportionate amount of the dyes we use which are imported from Germany?

Mr. KING. Now, the Senator means? I was alluding to the present time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. KING. Our current imports of dyes amount to only about 9 per cent of our domestic requirements, and of these only about half of the total importations, or less than 5 per cent of our consumption, are of the German dyes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Has not the embargo something to do with that small percentage?

Mr. KING. Undoubtedly the embargo affects imports. Indeed, the selective embargo now in force operates to restrict imports.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It could not help having something to do with it.

Mr. KING. I have no doubt that the embargo has something to do with it; but if we pass this bill with 60 per cent ad valorem and 7 cents per pound upon finished dyes, and 50 per cent ad valorem and 7 cents a pound upon intermediates, there will be but little need of an embargo—if the exclusion of dyes and intermediates is the great desideratum—because such extreme rates will assure the domestic market to American manufacturers, and an embargo would be superfluous. If time permits I shall show that under these high-tariff rates Germany will be unable to compete with the United States in the domestic market. Indeed, she is now unable to compete with American dye manufacturers in many of the dyes. The Senator will bear in mind that we have already approved of rates of 60 per cent ad valorem and 7 cents a pound upon the finished dyes and 50 per cent ad valorem and 7 cents a pound upon the intermedintes. It is contended by those entirely familiar with the dye industry that these rates are equivalent to an embargo, and that so far as the practical effect of the embargo provision of this bill is concerned, it will prove of but little importance to the dye consumers in the United States.

The Tariff Commission, in the Census of Coal Tar Chemicals and Dyes for 1920, made this comment upon the remarkable growth of the industry in this country:

One of the outstanding features of 1920 was the production of 18,178,231 pounds of indigo, valued at $18,497,981. This quantity exceeds by 195 per cent the production of 1919 and is 116 per cent greater than the importation of this dye for 1914. Sulphur black, which had previously been the first color in quantity produced, ranks second in 1920 with an output of 16,305,037 pounds. These two colors were exported in large quantity in that year.

The growth and extension of the American dye industry from 1914 to 1920, inclusive, is demonstrated in the following table, which shows production in pounds and value, value of exports and imports, and poundage of imports for each of the years for this period:

Domestic production and exports of dyes from 1914 to 1920, inclusive.

Year.	Pounds.	Value.	Exports.	Value of imports.	Pounds of imports.
1914	6,619,729	$2,470,096	$356,919	$7,453,736	42,229,796
1915			1,177,925
1916			5,102,002
1917	45,977,246	57,796,228	11,709,287	7,964,277	6,137,456
1918	58,464,446	62,026,390	16,921,988	4,745,428	4,288,554
1919	63,402,194	67,598,855	16,728,499	3,634,259	2,867,621

[No data available; Tariff Commission came into existence in 1917 and began compiling data.

The most dependable figures obtainable indicate that about 60 per cent of this enormous production of dyes is the product of two large corporations, the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation and E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., of Wilmington, Del. The Du Pont Co. has the largest and most modern indigo plant in the Western Hemisphere and, indeed, so far as I am able to determine from information which I have, the largest in the world.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is indigo a coal-tar product?

Mr. KING. It may be and is made from coal tar. Formerly, as the Senator knows, it was a natural dye.

The president of the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation admits that his company makes about 40 per cent of the dyes produced in the United States, and the president of the Du Pont Co. admits that his company makes at least 20 per cent of all the dyes produced in the United States. The capitalization of these two companies alone approximates $600,000,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, does that include the capitalization of the Du Pont Co. devoted to other matters than the manufacture of dyes?

Mr. KING. I think it includes all except that which it has invested in the General Motors Co.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The figure of $600,000,000 includes the capitalization, of course, of businesses which have no relation whatever to dyes.

Mr. KING. I do not admit that they have no relation whatsoever, but I do not claim that all of that capitalization is used in the manufacturing of dyes. I am calling attention to this for the reason that stress has been laid so frequently upon what is denominated the German capital. I will show later that the capitalization of one of these companies exceeds the capitalization of all of the dye corporations in Germany; and of course the Senator knows—he is a man of broad experience and of great wisdom—that if a corporation with a capitalization of three or four hundred millions of dollars is engaged in an industry or in a number of industries, one or two or more of which may be in competition with other industries, it has behind it a potential power that would not be possessed by a small corporation limiting its activities entirely to the dye business. To illustrate: If the Du Pont Co. has three hundred millions of capital—and it has more—and it uses fifty millions for dye purposes and two hundred and fifty millions in other enterprises, and it encounters competition in the dye industry, it has the potential power of a $300,000,000 corporation, and is unquestionably more powerful in the market as a competitor than if it had a capital of $50,000,000 only. So I call attention to these corporations and their enormous capital to show not only the actual but the potential possibility for monopolistic control.

When we add to this great capitalization the capital of other corporations engaged in the manufacture of dyes and chemicals, such as the Sherwin-Williams Co., the Monsanto Chemical Co., the Dow Chemical Co., the Newport Chemical Co., the Calco Chemical Co., the Grasselli Chemical Co., Heller & Merz, and also that of corporations engaged in making other synthetic organic chemicals or coal-tar products, such as Powers, Weightman & Co., Parke, Davis & Co., and other concerns, the capital invested by corporations which are engaged in the dye and chemical trades must approach if it does not exceed $1,000,000,000.

There are seven great corporations which occupy a dominating position in the dye and chemical trade in the United States. These corporations control at least 90 per cent of the annual production of the synthetic dyes and intermediates in this country. These companies are the E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., Wilmington, Del.; the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation, New York City; the Grasselli Chemical Co., Cleveland, Ohio; the Sherwin-Williams Co., Cleveland, Ohio; the Dow Chemical Co., Midland, Mich.; the Monsanto Chemical Works, St. Louis, Mo.; and the Newport Chemical Works, Milwaukee, Wis. The combined capital assets of these corporations exceeds $600,000,000. Not only do they control the great preponderance of chemical production in the United States but they also carry on an international business of large proportion. The Du Pont corporation has become so powerful that it now reaches over the seas and enters into trade combinations and agreements with foreign corporations. In the last session of Congress attention was called to the contract between the Du Pont Co. and Levinstein's (Ltd.), of England, by which the dye trade in the United States, Mexico, the West Indies, and South and Central America was allocated to the Du Pont Co. and the dye trade in the British Isles, Norway, Sweden, Denmark and Finland, Germany, Holland, Belgium, France, Portugal, and Italy, Switzerland, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Austria, Hungary, Serbia, Bulgaria, Rumania, Greece, and the British Dominions beyond the seas was allocated to Levinstein's (Ltd.), and the two conspiring corporations reserved for themselves common rights in the dye trade in Canada, Japan, China, and Russia.

It is also reported that the Du Pont company has an agreement with a French corporation with regard to the production and sale of artificial silk. The bulletin of the Republic of China, under date of June 24, 1921, reported that Dr. C. T. Wang and C. C. Nieh were preparing to form in combination with the Heng Sing Dye Co. to make dyes in China. The Heng Sing Co. is a Du Pont corporation operating in China.

The Sherwin-Williams Co. has numerous subsidiaries and is the largest producer of paints and varnishes in the United States, in Canada, and in Great Britain. Indeed, this company is recognized as the largest corporation in the paint business in the whole world. Its plants in the United States are located in Cleveland, Chicago, Newark, Boundbrook, N. J., Detroit, San Francisco, Boston, Dallas, and Lincoln. There are plants in Canada in Montreal, Toronto, and Winnipeg, and abroad at London, England, and Sydney, Australia. Sales offices and warehouses are maintained by the company in Albany, Atlanta, Baltimore, Birmingham, Boston, Buffalo, Chicago, Cincinnati, Columbus, Dallas, Denver, Detroit, Fort Worth, Houston, Indianapolis, Kansas City, Knoxville, London, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, Nashville, New Orleans, New York, Oklahoma City, Omaha, Pasadena, Peoria, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Portland, Richmond, San Antonio, San Francisco, Savannah, Seattle, Spokane, St. Louis, Toronto, Vancouver, and Waco. The company also operates a zinc and lead mine at Magdalena, N. Mex., and a zinc oxide smelter at Coffeyville, Kans. The president of the company, Walter H. Cottingham, states in a letter dated February 11, 1920:

> Our field is not confined to any locality, any State, any country, or any continent—it is world-wide. Our goods are known as well on the Atlantic as on the Pacific coast. They are as popular in all of Canada as in the United States. They are sold and used with as much satisfaction in England, Ireland, continental Europe, India, the Austro-Asian colonies, South Africa, and on the continent of South America as they are at home.

It must be said that the Sherwin-Williams Co. covers considerable territory. They also make synthetic dyes both for their own uses and for the trade. Indeed, Mr. Cottingham, president of the Sherwin-Williams Co., was the first president of the American Dyes Institute, which was organized as one of these notorious open-price associations and was really a conspiracy to control the dye business of the country. Since these organizations were outlawed by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Hardwood Lumber case, it is reported that the Dyes Institute, this child of Mr. Cottingham, has become moribund. But the institute, during the short period of its activity, expended over a quarter of a million dollars, largely in propaganda and lobbying for an embargo against the importation of dyes. These expenditures on the books of the institute are euphoneously called "legislative expenses." In any prudently managed business such illegitimate use of money would be regarded as an unwarranted waste, but these dye manufacturers have become so prosperous in their new-found profits that I am sure they will not miss the quarter of a million dollars of their money which has been wasted by the institute in an endeavor to consolidate the monopoly which they aim to establish with respect to the dye trade of the United States. The Sherwin-Williams Co. in the five years from 1916 to 1920, inclusive, reported net earnings in the aggregate amount of $16,148,434.

The Monsanto Chemical Works has plants in Missouri and Illinois and also operates a plant in North Wales. In the six years from 1916 to 1920, inclusive, this company earned $6,661,972 on common stock of the par value of $3,100,000. The Monsanto Co. in addition thereto has earned interest on its funded debt of $1,798,000.

Pursuing this question of the annual earnings of the corporations engaged in the dye trade in the United States, the firm of E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. earned in the seven years from 1914 to 1920, inclusive, aggregate profits in the sum of $202,133,790, which means average earnings of over $30,000,000 a year. The assets of this company are admitted to be $258,000,000, and this tremendous property and these unprecedented earnings have been practically a war fortune to this company. But the E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. is only a combination of a few or the corporations controlled by the Du Pont interests. These multifarious interests aggregate approximately $1,000,000,000.

At the beginning of the war the interests commonly known as the Du Pont interests were limited to a few corporations, the aggregate value of the capital stock of which was reputed to be less than $100,000,000. At the present time these same Du Pont interests have assets of more than $1,000,000,000, as I have just stated, and they own or have a controlling interest in a large number of corporations, some of which are as follows: The Du Pont Building Corporation; the Du Pont Nitrate Co.; the Du Pont American Industries Co.; and E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., having the Becton Chemical Co., Harrison Bros. & Co., the E. I. du Pont de Nemours Export Co., the Arlington Co., the New England Oil, Paint & Varnish Co., Cawley Clark & Co., the Du Pont Engineering Co., the Bridgeport Wood Finishing Co., the Flint Varnish & Color Works, the E. I. du Pont de Nemours Powder Co., the Du Pont Fabrikoid Co., and the Du Pont Chemical Co. as subsidiaries.

The Du Pont company has a dominating interest in the General Motors Co., which is reputed to have assets of over $600,000,000.

The Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation in 1921 had assets of more than $326,000,000. It owns various corporations such as the Solvay Process Co., the Semet Solvay Co., the National Aniline & Chemical Co., the Barrett Co., and the General Chemical Co., all of which, excepting the Barrett Co., absorbed various corporations. This great allied chemical company is the greatest chemical combination in the world. The terrible German cartel, or I. G., as it is called, which is being continually paraded as a scarecrow before Congress, is not a corporation but an association or syndicate of 12 corporations, comprising the entire German dye industry.

We do not realize the magnitude of the interests that are controlled by the Allied Chemical and Dye Corporation. This corporation has outstanding $100,000,000 of preferred stock which is readily sold at 110, and 3,143,000 shares of common stock with no indicated par but which is selling in the market at $69 per share, making an aggregate value of the shares of this corporation $326,867,000. According to authentic financial reports, the Barrett Co., one of the subsidiaries of the allied chemical combination which makes intermediates, in the first three months of 1921 realized sufficient profits to pay the annual dividends upon both the preferred and common stock of the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation. Against this, for purposes of comparison, let us place the corporations which constitute the German cartel, or the so-called Interessen Gemeinschaft, which is being constantly exhibited to frighten Congress into the belief that such concerns as the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation will be destroyed by German dye interests even if duties be imposed under which the prices for dyes in the American market may be maintained in many cases at 100 per cent above the price levels in the open world market, and in every case at levels which are a great deal more than 60 per cent above the open price in the world market, all of which would be the result of imposing duties of 60 per cent ad valorem and 7 cents per pound upon dyes, as is proposed in the pending bill. The German corporations which are associated in the so-called German cartel had, according to the report of the standing committee on trusts of the House of Commons, issued May 18, 1921, an aggregate capital of 1,221,000,000 marks. In 1916 the capital of these same companies was reported at 242,000,000 marks. Upon the basis of the British parliamentary report, the capital of 1,221,500,000 marks, converted by the value of the gold mark at 23.8 cents, would represent a total capitalization of $290,740,000, as against the capitalization of the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation of $326,867,000. Of course, I know it is claimed that there has been a great inflation of the capital of these German concerns, but it must be remembered that new capital added since and during the war has been upon the basis of the value of the German paper mark, which of course brings factors into the problem of valuation in gold which make a gold valuation difficult if not impossible of determination. But in any view of the matter the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation is a combination whose capital greatly exceeds the combined capital of the German cartel. It is a greater trust than the so-called German trust; and to say that this gigantic corporation can not hold its own in the American dye market with prices that may be maintained without an embargo at double the prices at which the German cartel must sell its dyes is so incredible as to be unworthy of the serious consideration or attention of the Senate. It is, moreover, believed that the assets of the E. I. du Pont de Nemours Co., which are reported at $253,000,000, are in fact of greater value in gold than the assets of the German cartel, and besides these we have 80 other corporations in this country which are engaged in the manufacture of synthetic dyes and whose aggregate capital will go into very large figures.

I may add by way of parenthesis at this point that the German companies have suffered great losses during and following the war and their assets have been materially reduced. It is worthy of note that these German companies in their attempts to compete with the American dye producers are handicapped by heavy export taxes in Germany, by the charges for packing, freight, insurance, and brokerage fees, as well as the very high duties, indeed almost prohibitive, which in the absence of an embargo are imposed upon the importation of dyes and chemicals under the provisions of this bill which compete in the American market with the chemical products of the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation, its subsidiary companies, and the other large chemical corporations engaged in the trade in this country.

Senators are familiar with some of these huge companies which have been absorbed by the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation. The Solvay Process Co., which is now owned by the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation, absorbed the Solvay Collieries Co. and the By-Products Coke Corporation. The Semet Solvay Co., which was a very large concern, acquired the Kentucky Solvay Coke Co. The National Aniline & Chemical Co., whose assets aggregated millions, and which is owned by the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation, took over the Schoellkopf Aniline & Chemical Works (Inc.); the W. Beckers Aniline & Chemical Works (Inc.); the Benzol Products Co.; the Standard Aniline Products Co.; the Century Color Corporation; the Aniline Products Plant, General Chemical Co., Easton, Pa.; the Aniline Products Plant, General Chemical Co., Marcus Hook, Pa.; and the Aniline Products Plant, Barrett Co., Shadyside, N. J.

The Barrett Co., which was incorporated in 1903, for many years was a large producer of dyes and chemical products. It absorbed 40 coal-tar and chemical plants found in 19 States. Proceedings were instituted against it for a violation of the Sherman antitrust law, and my recollection is that the issues were found against it. We now find that this company, with all of its subsidiary organizations, has been swallowed up by this great giant, the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation.

The General Chemical Co., which was incorporated in 1899 and had millions of capital and assets, absorbed the Virginia Mining Co., the Western Chemical Co., the General Lighterage Co., and the Nichols Chemical Co., and it in turn has been acquired by the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation.

Senators will perceive the power of these two great companies controlled by the Du Ponts and by the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation. These corporations constitute a trust and dominate the domestic dye market, and, indeed, it is claimed by many that they dominate the chemical industry of the United States.

The Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation has already become one of the largest, if not the largest, single producer of synthetic dyes in the world. In 1920 the production of the Allied was greater than that of the Badische Anilin Soda Fabrik, the largest of the German dye companies. In 1916 it was represented to the Ways and Means Committee by William Beckers, president of the William Beckers Aniline & Chemical Works (Inc.), Brooklyn, N. Y., and by J. F. Schoellkopf, president of the Schoellkopf Aniline & Chemical Works, Buffalo, N. Y., that with the imposition of an import duty of 30 per cent ad valorem and 7 cents per pound on coal-tar dyes that each of these concerns would severally be able to and would produce dyes sufficient to supply one-half of the total American domestic consumption. These were the two largest dye-making concerns in the country. They were conducted by men who knew the business and have spent years in building up their two establishments. The effect of this testimony was that these two companies would be equipped and prepared to turn out dyes equal to the total annual consumption of the country. These two large concerns have both been absorbed and taken over by the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation. Mr. Beckers is now nominally a director of the National Aniline & Chemical Co., a subsidiary of the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation, but is not active in the business. For all practical purposes he has retired from the dye business, and Mr. Schoellkopf has retired entirely from the dye business, his works having been purchased, as noted above, by the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation. The dye business in this country has been taken over for commercial and financial exploitation by one of the largest financial combines in the country, and the men who really were the pioneers in the business and who knew the business and were primarily engaged in the making of dyes have been supplanted by new men and new interests who desire to exploit the industry and the consuming public to the limit, and who are more concerned with propaganda and embargoes for the prohibition of imports than they are with the establishment of sound and permanent conditions in the industry and of stable relations with the textile and other trades which consume dyes as one of the leading raw materials of their respective trades.

The net earnings of the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation for 1920, after a deduction of taxes, inventory depreciation, and so forth, were reported at $16,179,920.

The Grasselli Chemical Co. has plants at Cleveland, Cincinnati, Bayonne, N. J., Rensselaer, N. Y., and other places in the country. It controls or owns the following subsidiary corporations: The American High Explosive Co., Burton Powder Co., Cameron Powder Co., and Bayer Co. In 1918 the Grasselli Chemical Co. purchased from the Alien Property Custodian, through the Sterling Products Co., the plant and business of the Bayer Co. in the United States, including patents for the manufacture of dyes owned by the Bayer Co. The Grasselli Co. has not used the Bayer patents for production in this country, but has been content to use its patent monopoly for the purpose of collecting royalties upon the importation of dyes from Germany, which are brought into the country under the license of the Dye and Chemical Control Section of the Treasury.

In the seven years from 1914 to 1920, inclusive, the net earnings of the Grasselli Co. were reported at $32,001,818.

The Dow Chemical Co. has extensive plants for the making of heavy chemicals, dyes, and pharmaceuticals at Midland, Mich. The par value of its stock issues is $3,000,000, and the corporation has no funded debt. Dividends on the preferred and common stock have been paid with regularity, and a number of special or extra dividends ranging from 25 per cent to 75 per cent have been made. Figures are not available showing the aggregate earnings of the corporation.

The Newport Co., with its head office at Milwaukee, Wis., has plants for the making of heavy chemicals, dyes, rosin, turpentine, and pine oil at Carrollville, Wis.; Pensacola, Fla.; Bay Minette, Ala.; and control through stock ownership the Milwaukee Coke & Gas Co. The financial situation of this company is a typical example of the inordinate prosperity of corporations engaged in the dye and chemical industry of this country. The company's outstanding securities at par are common stock, $312,198; preferred stock, $2,062,600; bonds, $2,500,000. The earnings of the corporation for 1917, 1918, and 1919 and for the first five months of 1920 were of the aggregate amount of $3,042,075. The earnings for the first five months in 1920 were at the rate of $3,040,000 per annum on outstanding common and preferred stock of $3,274,798. The productive capacity of the Newport Co., both in dollars and pounds of products, has been doubled since the company entered upon the manufacture of dyestuffs.

At this point I desire to digress for a moment and say something about the costs of production, as a number of Senators have asked me to submit some observations upon this point.

In January, 1916, a committee for the American Chemical Society, acting on behalf of the chemical and dye industries, appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means in support of House bill 702, entitled "A bill to provide revenue for the Government and to establish and maintain the manufacture of dyestuffs." This committee advised Congress that it was their deliberate and mature opinion that duties of 30 per cent ad valorem and 7 cents per pound imposed upon the importation of dyes from abroad would be adequate to establish and maintain the dye industry in the United States. It was also stated by this committee that the duties on intermediates should be 15 per cent ad valorem and 3½ cents per pound. There were on this committee men who were thoroughly conversant with the manufacture of dyes in this country and abroad and who were in fact the most experienced and best informed men in America on this subject. The committee based its representations and recommendations to Congress upon careful examination of cost accounts both as to labor and materials in the dye plants of Schoellkopf, Hartford & Hanna Co., now a part of the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation, and of Heller & Metz. This was supplemented by a table prepared by Mr. Schoellkopf showing the relative costs in the United States and Germany for the operation of dye plants having an annual capacity of 3,000,000 pounds of synthetic dyes. These calculations are based upon the use of dutiable intermediates, and the conclusion of Mr. Schoellkopf is that the cost of producing 3,000,000 pounds of coal-tar dyes in the United States would be $645,784.32 and in Germany $480,299.64, which means that the American cost would be 134.4 per cent of the German cost, from which it follows that an ad valorem duty of 34.4 per cent, not to speak of specific duties, would cover the difference in the cost of producing dyes between Germany and the United States. Of course, the foreign dyes would have added charges for packing, freight, insurance, brokerage, and so forth, to pay, all of which increases the handicap against the foreign dyes in the American market.

There is nothing to indicate to Congress that the differential in cost of dye production in Germany and the United States as found by Mr. Schoellkopf and presented to the Ways and Means Committee does not hold good at the present time. In other words, those who have come to Congress asking for increased rates of duty on the importation of dyestuffs have not seen fit to bring forward any proof or even statements as to their costs of production either for materials or labor at the present time.

In June and July, 1919, hearings were had before the Ways and Means Committee on the so-called Longworth bill providing for an embargo on foreign dyes, but no costs of production in the American industry were forthcoming. In December, 1919, and in January, 1920, hearings were had upon the Longworth bill before the Finance Committee of the Senate, but no proofs of cost production in the domestic dye industry were forthcoming. In August, 1921, hearings were had before the Senate Finance Committee on the proposed dye embargo in connection with the pending Fordney tariff bill, but again no costs of production in the domestic dye industry were forthcoming for the information of the committee or of Congress. Only one manufacturer of dyes in this country, namely, Mr. H. A. Metz, New York, who, by the way, was opposed to the embargo, was willing to disclose to the committee his costs of production. In fact, Mr. Metz did advise two of the leading members of the committee of the particulars of his costs both as to labor and materials covering a period of five years in one of his dye plants in Newark, N. J. Inasmuch, however, as the other manufacturers of dyes were unwilling to have their costs made public, it was deemed unfair to Mr. Metz to have a publication of his costs of production, and accordingly the information which he placed at the disposal of the committee was not published.

In 1920 the tariff commission issued a statement on "costs of production in the dye industry, 1918 and 1919." The statement, however, actually covers six months of 1918 and 9 months of 1919, making the total period covered of one year and three months. This statement is confined to data on 16 intermediates and 15 dyes and is accordingly so meager as to be of no utility as a basis for the determination of protective duties. When it is considered that there were over 600 intermediates and dyes reported in the dye census prepared by the tariff commission for 1921, the inadequacy of these so-called costs is so obvious as to require no further demonstration.

Referring to the cost data over a period of five years for the making of over 100 dyes in the plant of the Consolidated Color & Chemical Co., it was found that the average labor cost was less than 10 per cent of the total cost of producing dyes.

Since February 20 last, a special committee of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate has been investigating the dye industry in the United States with a view, among other things, to recommending legislation to Congress affecting the industry, and although the responsible officials of the dominating dye corporations of the country have appeared before the committee and urged the recommendation of an embargo against the importation of foreign dyes upon the assumption that they could not compete with imported dyes, none of these gentlemen have seen proper to advise the committee or Congress of their costs of production. On April 5 last, Dr. Eugene R. Pickrell brought this matter specifically to the attention of the chairman of the committee conducting the investigation, but no steps have been taken to procure cost data and information.

Authentic information received from Germany indicates that for the year 1921 the labor costs in the dye plants ran from 15 to 30 per cent of the total cost, varying according to the character of the dyes being produced, and that the costs of raw materials ranged from 30 to 50 per cent of the total costs of the dyes.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] referred to the question of wages as related to the dye industry. I have heretofore called attention to the fact that the reports from the Department of Commerce and the Census Bureau established that the wages paid in the chemical industry of the United States for the production of three and one-half billions of dollars of products aggregated only 8 per cent. This is less than the wages paid in this industry before the war, when 8½ per cent of the value of the product was absorbed in wages. As the value of the product has increased the relative amount of wages has gone down. In 1914 the ratio of wages to production in the chemical industry is greater than it has been since or is now.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator intend to state that the daily wage has gone down?

Mr. KING. I made no such statement. I said the ratio of wages paid to the value of the product.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can understand that very well, of course.

Mr. KING. That is what I stated. These gentlemen who are arguing for this embargo know what they want.

Mr. President, these gigantic corporations and interests of which I spoke a few moments ago determined to control the domestic market and to secure legislation that would perpetuate the monopoly which they enjoyed during the war. They entered upon their extensive and effective, not to say malign conspiracy, if not during the war at least soon after the armistice. I shall show later that they utilized the Alien Property Custodian and agencies of the Government and various instrumentalities and organizations to accomplish their end. With the utmost audacity they approached Congress and made a demand not only for prohibitive tariffs but for an embargo.

In the hearings before the Finance Committee, Sixty-sixth Congress, second session, Mr. Irenè du Pont, president of the E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., told Congress precisely what he wanted. On page 166 of the report of these hearings, Mr. du Pont said:

> In a preliminary hearing we had in Senator Penrose's office he asked a number of us to come down here and give our ideas, and asked us:
> "What do you want?"
> I say an embargo, with a permit to bring in these things we do not make for a 10-year period. I say we want, second, a tariff in addition to the embargo; the embargo may miscarry; put as high a duty as you can get behind the embargo wall. If the embargo works it don't make any difference what the duties are. But if the embargo leaks, put in the second wall, a high tariff, behind; put as high a tariff as you can get.
> I want further, then, at the risk of seeming to get a monopoly—

He knew what the effect of the demand which he was making would be, that it would establish a monopoly, or create a potential monopoly in the United States. He proceeded:

> I want further, then, at the risk of seeming to get a monopoly, to urge that you should provide that the Sherman law does not apply to the dye industry, if it is thought necessary in the opinion of some Government official. I say that not because we want a monopoly; we do not want it. If we have anybody competing for the prizes, that is the ideal way. But suppose some unexpected situation happens requiring that we get dye makers together on short notice to exchange information, some Government officer ought to be designated to say the Sherman Act does not apply to the dye industry, because it is in the interest of the public need, if that time ever comes. The importance of the matter has not been exaggerated by what these gentlemen have told you. I am not going on to that question, though I feel strongly about it, because you are satisfied. That phase should be considered. It is a good deal to ask, but the situation is not without precedence.

The dye makers have gotten together. The effect of their getting together is seen in the maintenance of prices in the domestic market at practically stationary levels for 1918, 1919, and 1920. The average price of domestic dyes in 1918 was $1.06 per pound, in 1919 $1.07 per pound, in 1918 $1.08 per pound, as compared to 25 cents per pound before the war. The present situation in the domestic dye market is indicated by a comparison of present prices with pre-war prices as to 25 principal dyes the production of which constitutes 75 per cent of the total production of dyes in the United States.

I have here a table covering 25 dyes, the production in 1920, the names, the present domestic prices—that is, of February 3, 1922—and the pre-war prices. Without reading the same, I ask that it may be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request will be granted.

The table is as follows:

Mr. KING. Let me call attention to a few of these dyes. Let us take direct yellow R.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I interrupt the Senator once more? I crave his pardon.

Mr. KING. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Did the Senator give the average price of dyes for 1920?

Mr. KING. No; but I shall do so.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I thought I heard the Senator say it was $1.08 a pound.

Mr. KING. I said that the average price of domestic dyes in 1918 was $1.08 per pound; in 1919, $1.07 per pound.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator give it for 1921?

Mr. KING. I have not given that. I shall come to that a little later.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the Senator will find that it is 83 cents.

Mr. KING. I knew there has been a reduction, because the domestic dye manufacturers produced such a surplus that they could not find sufficient markets abroad, and some grades of dyes came back upon them like the flowing tide. Nevertheless, they kept prices 300 per cent or more above the pre-war prices.

I was directing attention to the dye known as direct yellow R. The price on February 3, 1922, was $2 a pound. The pre-war price was 27 cents.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if I understood the Senator from New Jersey correctly, he made a statement in his speech to the effect that both France and Great Britain have an embargo.

Mr. KING. I will discuss that a little later, if the Senator will pardon me. I will show just what they have done.

The domestic price of tartrazine on February 3, 1922, was $1 a pound, and the pre-war price was 28 cents.

The domestic price of metanil yellow on February 3, 1922, was $1 a pound, and the pre-war price was 24 cents.

The domestic price on oxamine black, B. H. N., on February 3, 1922, was $1.20. The pre-war price was 22 cents.

The domestic price of oxamine green, B. X., on February 3, 1922, was $1.25 a pound. The pre-war price was 35 cents.

The price on February 3, 1922, of malachite green was $1.35 a pound, and the pre-war price was 40 cents.

The price of methylene blue on February 3, 1922, was $1.50 a pound, and the pre-war price was 50 cents.

It may not be quite pertinent to the discussion at this point, but I desire to inform the Senate that in addition to the enormous production of dyes in the United States—a production greater than that of any country in the world—the United States produces greater quantities of coal-tar products and more of the by-products of the coke oven than any country in the world. Indeed, my information is that we produce more than all the rest of the world combined. With the enormous increase in the production of bituminous coal, followed by the great increase in the number of coke ovens and in the output of coke ovens, the United States produces more intermediates than all other countries combined, and is in a position to outstrip the world in the production of intermediates and the by-products of coke ovens. There is no reason why the United States should not lead the world in the production of dyes and intermediates, as well as in the production of all forms of chemical products. With our great mineral resources and the inexhaustible treasure houses which nature has blessed this Republic, the United States can lead the world in the chemical industry, as she is leading it in the production of steel and in many other industries. But in the chemical industry, particularly that branch of it known as the dye industry, there has developed a selfish and greedy spirit which demands the legislation found in this bill and which, as I have repeatedly said, can not be defended in morals or upon any just or rational grounds.

Speaking of intermediates, let me add that a number of the great corporations whose names I have mentioned control, if they are not supreme, in the production of intermediates.

The control of intermediates, or of the production and sale of intermediates, always makes for potential control of the dyestuff industry itself. The making of intermediates requires large investment of capital, and the great majority of the dye makers of this country are compelled to purchase their intermediates. There is much greater concentration in the domestic production of intermediates than there is in the domestic production of dyes.

The control of the intermediates is perhaps more easily accomplished than is the control or monopoly of the finished dye products. In other words, it is perhaps a less difficult task, where corporations have great capital, to control or monopolize the intermediates than it is the finished products, and accordingly we find that two great corporations, with capital approximating $600,000,000, namely, the American Chemical & Dye Corporation and the E. I. du Pont de Nemours Co., have together a practical control of the production of intermediates in this country, from which it follows that any manufacturer of dyes and dyestuffs who is outside the dye combination is at the mercy of these corporations when he must purchase intermediates as the raw materials of his business. The control of intermediates is one of the reasons for the present high prices of dyes. This condition is exemplified by the following table, which compares the pre-war domestic price of intermediates with the prices obtained in 1920 in the controlled market in this country:

Comparison of pre-war domestic prices with 1920 prices of 28 intermediates representing over 70 per cent of the production in the United States in 1920.

The average of these prices on intermediates, which represent over 70 per cent of the 1920 production in this country, is four and one-tenth times higher than the pre-war average price of these same intermediates in the domestic market. We have here one of the fertile causes for the maintenance of dye prices at unprecedented levels years after the war inflation has subsided as to the prices of all other articles of general consumption. While the average price for dyes is now three and eight-tenths times higher than the average pre-war price, and the average price of intermediates is four and one-tenth times the average pre-war price, no inflation comparable to this exists with regard to the prices of other commodities, many of which have reached pre-war levels, and the great majority of which are approaching pre-war price levels. I have prepared a table which exemplifies the deflation of prices which has been accomplished and which is in progress in the general commodity markets of the country. This table is based upon the wholesale price at the dates specified for 52 essential commodities of wide general use, comparison being made between the prices of such commodities in June, 1914, and in September of 1921:

This table demonstrates that whereas the average present prices on the above-enumerated 52 essential commodities of wide general use have reached levels which are not above 119 per cent of the pre-war prices, the average price for dyes at the present time is more than 300 per cent of the average price obtaining before the war.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the source of the information which the Senator has just given?

Mr. KING. I obtained it from a Department of Commerce report, from the Tariff Commission, and from market reports. I have all the data here if anyone cares to examine the matter.

Mr. POMERENE. I merely wanted the RECORD to show the source of the Senator's information.

Mr. KING. At this point I desire to briefly refer to some of the tariff legislation dealing with dyes.

The first tariff law which laid a tariff upon dyes was enacted January 30, 1864. This was only a year or two after the first coal-tar dyes appeared on the market. Coal-tar dyes and dyestuffs have been either dutiable or free in every tariff since the act of 1864 up to and including the special legislation enacted as a part of the general revenue act of September 8, 1916. Special legislation was incorporated in that general revenue act whereby dyes and intermediates received protection in conformity to the request of the domestic dye manufacturers. Dyes were assessed at either 30 per cent ad valorem or 30 per cent ad valorem and 5 cents a pound. Intermediates were made dutiable at 15 per cent ad valorem and 2½ cents per pound. The protection afforded to dyes and dyestuffs under this special legislation was approximately equal to the protection afforded the dye industry from 1864 to 1883, during which time a very substantial dye industry was created in this country.

The pending bill as passed by the House of Representatives last July gives a greater protection to dyes and dyestuffs than either the general revenue act of September 8, 1916, which is in effect to-day, or the protection in existence from 1864 to 1883. The rates in the Fordney bill, as it passed the House, for dyes, are 35 per cent ad valorem, based on American valuation, and 7 cents per pound; and for intermediates 30 per cent ad valorem, based on American valuation, and 7 cents a pound.

The following shows the provisions for coal-tar dyes and the rates of duty in all of the tariff acts, beginning with the act of June 30, 1864, and concluding with the present act, Title V, September 8, 1916:

June 30, 1864: Anilin dyes, 35 per cent ad valorem and $1 per pound.

July 14, 1870: Anilin dyes, 35 per cent ad valorem and 50 cents per pound; anilin oil, crude, free, picric and nitro-picric acid, free.

February 6, 1875: Same as 1870, with addition of nitrobenzol, 10 cents per pound, alizarine, free.

March 3, 1883: Coal-tar dyes, 35 per cent, alizarine, natural and artificial, free; indigo and artificial indigo, free; anilin oil and salts, free.

October 1, 1890: Same as 1883, with dyes known commercially as alizarine yellow, alizarine orange, alizarine green, alizarine blue, alizarine brown and alizarine black added to the free list.

August 27, 1894: Coal-tar dyes, 25 per cent, alizarine and indigo, free; alizarine dyes free; anilin oil and salts, free.

July 24, 1897: Coal-tar dyes, 30 per cent, alizarine and alizarine dyes, free; anthracene dyes, free; indigo, free; anilin oil and salts, free.

August 5, 1900: Same as 1897.

October 3, 1913: Coal-tar dyes, 30 per cent, alizarine and alizarine dyes, free; anthracene dyes, free; indigo and indigo dyes, free; carbazol dyes, free; anilin oil and salts, toluidin, xylidin, etc., 10 per cent.

September 8 1916: Coal-tar dyes, 30 per cent and 5 cents per pound, indigo and indigo dyes, 30 per cent; alizarine and alizarine dyes, 30 per cent; anthracene dyes, 30 per cent; carbazol dyes, 30 per cent; anilin oil and salts and anildonaphthol, amidophenol, etc., 15 per cent and 2½ cents per pound.

Notwithstanding the fact that the embargo upon dyestuffs is without precedent in the fiscal policy of the country, is confessedly inimical to the public interest, is detrimental to the great textile industry, and is an insuperable impediment to the development of independent dye manufacture, the existing dye combine has conspired to perpetuate the existing temporary embargo and would make the same the permanent policy of the Government.

A few moments ago I referred to the two representatives of the dye interests of the United States, Doctor Becker and Mr. Schoellkopf, who appeared before the Ways and Means Committee of the House in 1916 and there testified that with the rates which were then fixed and which are in the existing law they could produce within a limited period practically all of the dyes needed in the United States. The chairman of the committee, Mr. KITCHIN, suggested the possibility of their forming a monopoly, but was assured that they would not establish a monopoly, and that if they could have rates of 30 per cent ad valorem and 7 cents specific, they would within such limited period be able to compete with the world in the domestic market and would be able to satisfy all demands of the domestic market.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, has the Senator made any calculation as to which is actually the higher rate, the House rate ad valorem on the American valuation or the Senate committee rate on the foreign valuation?

Mr. KING. I have attempted that, but it is very difficult because of the fluctuation in foreign prices. Before I get through I think I shall be able to show the Senator that the foreign prices now are so much higher than they were a few months ago that the figures which I could have prepared then would be of no avail now. In other words, the foreign valuation is more nearly approaching the American valuation, not because of the reductions here, but because of the augmentation of prices there. Prices have gone up tremendously on dye products in Germany during the past few months, caused by scarcity of raw materials and the great increase in the price of the labor and other industrial causes. However, generally speaking, the Senate rates are higher.

Mr. President, at the risk of wearying the Senate, I purpose discussing some of the means employed by the domestic dye producers to obtain an embargo and some of the agencies, instrumentalities, and corporations employed to further their schemes. Among the agencies controlled and directed by those interested in the manufacture of dyes and chemical products were the Chemical Foundation, the American Dyes Institute, the Textile Alliance, the Synthetic Organic Chemical Manufacturers' Association, the Alien Property Custodian and persons connected therewith, individuals connected with the Treasury Department and other executive and administrative organizations, as well as numerous individuals, lobbyists, attorneys, associations, and so forth. Like all propagandists, the dye monopoly has sought to conduct its agitation under the guise of pretended public, not to say eleemosynary, corporations and societies.

It is through these agencies that the propaganda for the dye embargo has been carried on, and it is through some of these agencies that large sums of money have been distributed for this purpose. The three institutions, euphoniously called foundations, institutions, and alliances, which have been the most active are the Chemical Foundation, the American Dyes Institute, and the Textile Alliance. They have been made the creatures of the dye combination. Indeed, it is through these agencies that the combination has been effective. Through the Chemical Foundation the dye combine controls the use of all the German patents and formulæ for dyes and chemicals which have been taken out in the United States. Through the Textile Alliance the dye combine has controlled the selection, collection, and distribution of all the dyes from Germany which are purchased from the Reparation Commission for importation into the United States. Through the American Dyes Institute the members of the dye combine have met and arranged the prices to be charged in this country for dyes, have distributed territory among the members both as to the domestic trade and foreign trade, and have limited, restricted, and regulated production, and have arranged that there is never any excessive quantity of domestic dyestuffs on the American market to force prices down to a lower level.

This remarkable condition of affairs is all the more intolerable and inexcusable when the fact is known and considered that neither in the charter nor the avowed purposes of either the Chemical Foundation or the Textile Alliance is there a word or a clause justifying, directing, or authorizing these institutions and corporations to engage in any such work and activities.

The Textile Alliance has no more authority to engage in this traffic in reparation dyes than it has to operate railroads. The alliance has no authority to engage in business of any kind. The only reasonable explanation that can be offered for what it has done is that it is absolutely under the domination of officials, directors, friends, and agents of the E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation, and other dye and chemical companies.

On the advisory committee of the Chemical Foundation, as well as on the executive committee of the Textile Alliance, are directors and officials of both the E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. and the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation. For instance, the dye advisory committee of the War Trade Board, which controlled the dye imports to the United States during the war, were Morris R. Poucher, Du Pont de Nemours & Co.; Robert T. Baldwin, Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation; Charles H. Herty, Synthetic Organic Chemical Manufacturers' Association; Henry B. Thompson, United States Finishing Co.; August Merz, Heller & Merz; Franklin W. Hobbs, Arlington Mills; Louis B. Timm, Manhattan Shirt Co.; and Edward F. Lotte.

Those were the members of the dye advisory committee of the War Trade Board, and they controlled the importation of dyes and practically the dye business of the United States. When the War Trade Board went out of existence that work was transferred bodily to the State Department, and they organized there the dye advisory committee. War Trade Board Section of the State Department, to control the dye situation, and the same individuals constituted the advisory committee of the State Department. Then, when the State Department transferred it or, rather, when by law it was transferred to the Treasury Department, there was organized the dye advisory committee, Dye and Chemical Control Section of the Treasury Department, and these same gentlemen constituted the advisory committee of the Treasury Department. And we have the Textile Alliance and we have these same gentlemen constituting the dye advisory committee of the Textile Alliance.

So, Mr. President, wherever we touch any phase of the dye industry in the United States, whether it is Du Pont or the Allied Chemical Co. or the Textile Alliance or the Chemical Foundation or the dye advisory committee of the War Trade Board, or that agency of the State Department or that agency of the Treasury Department, we touch Mr. Poucher and the other individuals who have represented to a greater or less degree the domestic dye interests of the United States.

THE CHEMICAL FOUNDATION.

One of the most delectable institutions which has been created to further the interests of the dye combination of this country is the Chemical Foundation, a corporation of Delaware, organized February 16, 1919. This corporation was said by Mr. Joseph H. Choate, jr., one of our newly arrived authorities on chemicals and dyes, to have been conceived in the fertile brain of Mr. Francis P. Garvan. Mr. Garvan was Alien Property Custodian and by virtue of his office was trustee of some 4,800 patents covering chemical processes for the manufacture of dyes and other synthetic organic products from coal tar and coal-tar intermediates, which had been seized as alien enemy property, pursuant to the trading with the enemy act.

Mr. Joseph H. Choate, jr., was a dollar-a-year man in the office of the Alien Property Custodian. Mr. Ramsey Houget was also a dollar-a-year man in the office of the Alien Property Custodian, and Messrs. Otto H. Bannard, Cleveland H. Dodge, George L. Ingraham, Benjamin Griswold, jr., and Ralph Stone constituted the so-called advisory sales committee of the Alien Property Custodian's office, which committee, as I am informed, assumed to pass upon the propriety and reasonableness of the sales of property held in trust by the Alien Property Custodian. It is assumed that these gentleman served without pay or for the nominal compensation of $1 per year. I am not advised whether they had any actual functions to perform or whether their names are merely used for the sake of appearances, as are the names of prominent persons frequently used by corporations and others who desire to trade upon the good reputation of public men.

Returning to the Chemical Foundation, Congress, in section 10 of the trading with the enemy act, had authorized the President to grant licenses for the use of the patents to be seized by the Alien Property Custodian. The President delegated this authority by Executive order to the Federal Trade Commission, and the Federal Trade Commission under this authority has granted a large number of licenses to American citizens for the use of these German patents in the manufacture of both dyestuffs and drugs and medicines and other synthetic organic chemicals.

Let me state at this point that there has been considerable turmoil since President Harding directed the Attorney General to institute proceedings against the Chemical Foundation to set aside the sale of these patents by Mr. Garvan as Alien Property Custodian to himself as the president of the Chemical Foundation. I congratulate President Harding for having done his duty.

I regard the pretended sale as passing no title or, at least, a voidable one. It was a high-handed, indefensible proceeding upon the part of Mr. Garvan to dispose of property worth millions to an organization which he had contrived, and of which he was the head, for a sum which was not only grossly inadequate but was insignificant, measured by the value of the property. If the American people want to take away from the German owners their patents, their patent rights, their trademarks, their copyrights, and other property in the United States let them do it with some decent regard for international treaties and law, but to seize property under the strong hand of the law and then sell it to ourselves for a grossly inadequate sum is confiscation, though we may have done it under the guise of law. No honest nation can afford, in dealing even with the nationals of an enemy country, to be guilty of injustice of that character. I would treat German nationals the same as I would treat the nationals of any other country; the same as I expect Germany to trent the nationals of the United States. We have not yet become pirates or robbers or looters, having no regard for international comity or for the rights of aliens who may come into the United States.

Mr. President, we have to-day, perhaps, $20,000,000,000 of American capital invested either in bonds or in property, personal, real, or mixed, in foreign countries. Supposing we announce a policy of confiscation of the property of the nationals of other countries in the event of war, we would suffer the most from that policy, because we are a creditor Nation; we have more to lose than would any other country.

The United States has always contended for the sanctity of private property and insisted that it be immune from seizure by belligerent nations. Our statesmen have prided themselves upon their devotion to international morality and to the highest and noblest precepts that should govern international relations. We can not afford to tarnish the honor of our country or bring its good name into question by advocating or adopting a policy which leads to the confiscation of the property of aliens.

Germans, Austrians, and the nationals of many countries invested millions, indeed hundreds of millions, of dollars in the United States under the protection of treaties and in reliance upon the accepted standards of international ethics for which the United States contended and to the adherence of which it had pledged its honor. It is proposed by some that because the German Government committed torts against our Government, and against American citizens, that reprisals be made by the United States against German nationals who had investments in the United States when we entered the war in April, 1917. They insist that we had the legal and the moral right to seize the property of enemy aliens which was found in the United States at the beginning of or during the war, and to dispose of it in any manner that we saw fit. They justify the sale of property worth hundreds of millions of dollars by the Alien Property Custodian, some of which was sold, or rather disposed of, without adequate consideration, indeed, in some instances at a grossly inadequate consideration. There are those who insist that all of this alien property should be confiscated by the United States and that it should be turned over to Americans who have claims against the German Government. There are those who demand that the more than 4,800 patents seized by the Alien Property Custodian under the trading with the enemy act be confiscated and the German owners absolutely deprived of their property therein. They ignore international morality and the terms of the trading with the enemy act, which in effect declares that such patents shall be held in trust and the proceeds derived from the use or licensing of the same shall be paid to the German owners. They ignore the repeated declarations made when the trading with the enemy act was under consideration in Congress, to the effect that the property, the sequestration of which was authorized, be held by the United States or the Alien Property Custodian as a trustee for the use and benefit of the alien owners.

There are some Americans who seem to glory in the fact that patents worth millions of dollars were seized by the Alien Property Custodian and sold by him to himself as president of the corporation which he caused to be organized, for a mere pittance—a sum wholly insignificant measured by the value of the patents. I have insisted for more than a year that the Attorney General institute proceedings to set aside the fraudulent sale of these patents and I am glad to know that the President of the United States has directed such an action and that the Attorney General is preparing to bring suit pursuant to the directions of the President.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator's observations bring up a very interesting question.

Mr. KING. I apologize for digressing, but will hasten along.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I gather from the Senator's observations that he believes that these patents should be returned to their original owners?

Mr. KING. I made no statement with reference to that matter.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But that is the unavoidable inference from the Senator's remarks, is it not?

Mr. KING. Will the Senator please renew his question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator from Utah believe that the patents should be returned to their original owners?

Mr. KING. I do not believe that these patents or any other property seized by the Alien Property Custodian and belonging to German or Austrian nationals should be confiscated. There is some doubt as to the right of our Government to even sequester the property of German nationals under the terms of the treaty that was in force when the United States entered the war. But waiving that question, it is my contention that the property seized should have been held in trust, to be returned to the owners of the same at the termination of the war. I do not intend to say that the United States had no technical right to sell property which was sequestered. It had the power, and under international law it had the technical right to convert to its own use any property seized which was required by the Government in its military operations. It had the right to seize patents, and if those patents were necessary to the United States in the prosecution of the war it had the right to appropriate the same, but only upon condition of paying to the owners thereof or to the Alien Property Custodian, to be held by him in trust for the owners, the fair market value of the same. The Government had the right to appropriate for its own use the patents or property of American citizens, but only upon condition that just compensation be paid to the owners of the same. There could be no objection to the course of the Executive after the seizure of these patents in placing them under the power of the Federal Trade Commission, in order that licenses might be issued for their use, providing the royalties or fees resulting therefrom were to be retained by the Federal Trade Commission for the owners of the patents. Congress made express provision for this in the trading with the enemy act. That was entirely proper, and if the policy were continued it would be unobjectionable, because if the German owners receive reasonable royalties for the use of their patents they are not injured or deprived of their property, but effectually enjoy the use of the same.

When the war was over, however, this Government should have appointed a commission to deal with the general subject of alien property, such as was appointed following the Spanish-American War. That commission, as did the Spanish-American commission, could have determined the ownership of the property seized and ordered restoration to those entitled to the same whether the property was valuable or of but little worth.

With reference to the patents sold by the Alien Property Custodian to himself, or to a corporation which he organized, it has been my contention that the sale was fraudulent and illegal and should be set aside and the patents, together with all the royalties and proceeds derived from the use of the same, placed in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian to be held by him until Congress took such action as it deemed proper.

Senators will recall that these patents were not sold by Mr. Garvan as Alien Property Custodian until after the armistice. They were sold, as I recall, in April, 1919. The transaction had every appearance of being in furtherance of a scheme or design to deprive the German owners of these patents, regardless of their rights or of the provisions of the trading with the enemy act or of the principles of international law which should obtain between civilized and enlightened nations. Of course there was some property seized by the Alien Property Custodian of a perishable nature which ought to have been sold, and perhaps some classes of property which were so peculiar or unique or the circumstances concerning the same of such a character as to warrant the sale of the same in order that loss might not result to the owners of the same. But no sale in my opinion should have been made except the interests of the owners of the same were to be subserved.

The Alien Property Custodian held the property as a trustee. He owed to the cestui que trust the highest duty, and it was his solemn duty to handle the property with an eye single to the welfare and advantage of the owners of the property.

I repeat, Mr. President, that as to the patents sold by Mr. Garvan to the Chemical Foundation, the sale should be set aside and the control of the patents placed with the Alien Property Custodian. Congress then, by appropriate legislation, should make provision to restore these patents to the owners, together with the royalties which have been received.

In determining whether property should be restored to the owners from whom it was taken, the important question is not its value. It is wholly unimportant whether the patents taken are valuable or of but little worth. They belong to German nationals. They were obtained in a proper way under laws of our own making and pursuant to treaties negotiated between the United States and the German Government. German nationals took out patents within the United States, and American citizens took out patents under the German laws. The German Government did not confiscate or attempt to confiscate patents owned by Americans and taken out in Germany. There are some whose vision is so clouded as to perceive no immorality in a policy which robs German nationals of their patents obtained in the United States, providing the patents are of great value. Apparently those entertaining this view regard the theft of valuable property as violative of no principle of morality and justice. Perhaps they would regard the confiscation of property of but little value as an atrocious crime. However, if these patents are of such imperative need to the American people as to demand the assertion of the power of might, then it would seem that the only decent thing for the United States to do would be to pay to the German owners of these patents the full value of the use which has been made of them, together with the full market value of the same. If these patents are so indispensable to the welfare and prosperity of the American people, they should be willing to compensate those who are the owners of the same.

I may not have answered the question of the Senator from New York very clearly. I should be glad to get his views as to what ought to be done.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I have been puzzled as to the solution the Senator has to offer. Of course, these patents are not the only ones. We have been talking about dye patents all day, but there are other patents which the Government took.

Mr. KING. The Beyer patents.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I refer to patents on some exceedingly important instruments which the War and Navy Departments now possess.

Mr. KING. The Senator states that the Government has taken over valuable patents from Germany. I am not advised as to the method adopted by the Government in obtaining possession of the patents or in making use of the same. In my opinion the Government, if it has taken over patents belonging to German citizens, should restore the patents or take proper steps to purchase the same if it regards the patents as of great or vital importance for the welfare of the Nation. Of course, it is difficult to determine the value of a patent. The seized patents will expire within a few years, so that perhaps the only practical way of making compensation to the owners would be to pay just and fair royalties for the use of the same. The trading with the enemy act expressly provided not only that the owners of the patents should have the royalties but that the owners of the patents might go into the American courts to have the royalties fixed at a reasonable rate if they were not satisfied with royalties as fixed by the Federal Trade Commission.

I presume our Government acquired patents from American citizens prior to and during and since the war. I have not learned that our Government forcibly deprived American citizens of their property in patents or their rights in any other form of property. If it acquired private property, it paid for the same. It seems to me that in principle the same course should be pursued by the Government with respect to patents owned by Germans or other aliens.

I repeat that it is the duty of Congress to immediately deal with the question of sequestered property and provide for its restoration to those to whom it belongs. Even if the position be taken that the Alien Property Custodian was authorized to sell the property for the Government, then its sale for an inadequate or unfair price was a fraud against the United States. And if he held their seized property in trust for the owners, then its sale for an inadequate or unfair price would be a fraud against the owners. His act would amount to a de facto and unauthorized confiscation.

Mr. President, I am afraid that the Alien Property Custodian and some associated with him misconceived the law and failed to understand their duty. They seemed to proceed upon the theory that they were authorized to carry on war in the United States against Germany by confiscating the property of Germans.

Senators will remember that at the beginning of our Government we were called upon to announce a policy with respect to the private property of foreign citizens, not only in peace time but when war existed. Our Nation then declared in favor of the immunity of private property from confiscation by belligerent nations. It was declared in the Buena Ventura case, found in 175 U. S., that our Government has always been among the most advanced of the governments of the world in mitigating, as to all noncombatants, the hardships and horrors of war. In 1784 when a treaty was negotiated with Prussia it was declared in effect that in the event of war between the contracting parties the merchants of the respective countries residing in the other country were to be allowed to remain for nine months and to depart freely, taking all their effects; and it was further provided that various persons might remain without molestation and carry on their employments and that their property should not be destroyed. But if anything was taken by the belligerent nation which was necessary in its military operations the same should be paid for at a reasonable price. A treaty having similar terms was in force between the United States and Germany when we entered the war.

In the Jay treaty the policy of our Nation toward private property of aliens was again declared. It was in substance stated that the private property of enemy aliens, in the event of war or national differences, should not be sequestered or confiscated. It was also declared to be unjust and impolitic to pursue a course of confiscation. Mr. Hamilton condemned in the strongest language the policy of confiscation of private property. He stated that no language enabled him—to express his abhorrence at the idea of violating the property of individuals, which, in an authorized intercourse in time of peace has been confided to the faith of our Government and laws, on account of controversies between nation and nation. In my view every moral and every political sense unite to consign it to execration.

He declared that such a policy is contrary in principle to the provision of the Constitution, which declares that—no State shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts.

Our Nation from the beginning, as I have stated, has contended that it was a rule of international law to exempt private property of alien enemies from confiscation. Indeed we have contended for the rule that not only private property upon land, but also private property upon the ocean should be exempt from seizure. I recall that Mr. Justice Peckham said that this policy was one that was supported as a matter of humanity and morals and that it was anachronistic when private property is respected on land and not respected on sea. In other words, he took the position that it was firmly embedded in international law that private property on land was immune from seizure, and pointed to the inconsistency of denying this doctrine to private property upon the sea.

Mr. President, I return after this rather lengthy digression, for which I apologize, to a consideration of the activities of the Chemical Foundation.

Congress had made effective and adequate provision for the equal use upon reasonable fees of these German patents by citizens of the United States. But Mr. Garvan was clearly of the opinion that Congress was incompetent to deal with this question of the ultimate disposition of the German patents and of their intermediate use in the industries of the United States, and took it upon himself to become a voluntary and self-constituted irresponsible "trustee" to take over these patents and control the same as he might conceive to be for the permanent interest of the dye industry in the United States. He and the dye interests, including the Du Ponts, Morris Poucher, and Mr. Choate, therefore procured the incorporation of the Chemical Foundation, which was incorporated under the laws of Delaware February 16, 1919. Its capital stock is $500,000, of which $400,000 is preferred and $100,000 common stock. The common stock is placed in the hands of the following trustees:

Otto P. Bannard, New York City.
Cleveland H. Dodge, New York City.
George L. Ingraham, New York City.
Benjamin Griswold, jr., Baltimore, Md.
Ralph Stone, Detroit, Mich.

These gentlemen then constituted the so-called advisory sales committee of the Alien Property Custodian. I have been advised that Mr. Stone has retired as one of the trustees of the Chemical Foundation, and in his place has been appointed Mr. Bradley W. Palmer, of Boston, Mass.

Mr. Francis P. Garvan, Alien Property Custodian, became the president of the Chemical Foundation, the incorporation of which he conceived and procured. Mr. Joseph H. Choate, jr., dollar-a-year man in the office of the Alien Property Custodian, became counsel for the Chemical Foundation, and at last reports had received $20,000 in fees as such counsel. Mr. Ramsey Houget, another dollar-a-year man in the office of the Alien Property Custodian, became the patent attorney of the Chemical Foundation, and has received fees on this account which at last reports amounted to $50,319.50.

The Chemical Foundation has collected royalties for the use of patents and upon the importation of patented articles, which at last reports amounted to $420,640.95. Pursuant to this conspiracy, which was hatched in the office of the Alien Property Custodian, an executive order was procured from Hon. Frank Polk, Acting Secretary of State, dated February 26, 1919, authorizing the Alien Property Custodian to sell and transfer the patents which had been seized by the Alien Property Custodian to the Chemical Foundation. At this time A. Mitchell Palmer was Alien Property Custodian and Francis P. Garvan was president of the Chemical Foundation and chief of the Bureau of Investigation in the Alien Property Custodian's office. Mr. Garvan himself became Alien Property Custodian on March 4, 1919, and on April 10, 1919, Francis P. Garvan, Alien Property Custodian, sold and transferred to Francis P. Garvan, president of the Chemical Foundation, 4,802 German patents for the nominal sum of $250,000. The reasonableness of the price obtained from the Chemical Foundation for these patents was presumably passed upon by Messrs. Otto P. Bannard, Cleveland H. Dodge, George L. Ingraham, Benjamin Griswold, jr., and Ralph Stone, who were then members of the so-called advisory sales committee of the Alien Property Custodian's office and also constituted the board of trustees of the Chemical Foundation, to which the sale was made. The President of the United States, in a letter to the Alien Property Custodian, dated July 1, 1922, officially declared this price to be merely nominal and to have constituted an abuse of the trust under which the patents were held by the Alien Property Custodian. The merely nominal character of the price obtained for the patents, to wit, $250,000, is indicated by the fact that royalties alone received by the Chemical Foundation for the use of these patents have already amounted to nearly double the sum paid for the patents, and this does not include the sum of $491,000 received as royalties for the use of these same patents by the Federal Trade Commission. The patent on salvarsan alone was worth more than a million dollars, and it is positively known that the value of these patents went up into many millions of dollars, all of which were sold for the relatively inconsiderable sum of $250,000.

The President of the United States has instructed the Alien Property Custodian to demand the return of these patents to the Government and also to demand an account of the issues, rents, and profits for the use of such patents while in the hands of the Chemical Foundation. These profits have already been expended in propaganda to procure the enactment of the dye embargo which is contained in the pending bill. Indeed, not only have these profits been expended but the capital of the Chemical Foundation itself has been dissipated and a large deficit created in the prosecution of this vicious propaganda. The chemical combine has thus made itself the beneficiary of this illegal and fraudulent transaction between officers of the Government in their official capacity and the same persons in their private capacity, by which they have converted and appropriated to the use of the dye and chemical combine properties held in trust by themselves as responsible officials of the Government.

But the Chemical Foundation is merely another name for the dye combination. Every dye-making concern in the United States holds stock in the Chemical Foundation. The board of trustees, whose names are used to give an air of respectability to the combine of dye manufacturers which was organized to confiscate for their own uses the patents in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian, are mere figureheads and have neither functions nor powers which are actually performed for the control of the Chemical Foundation.

The real power in this corporation is the so-called advisory committee, whose names, as far as I am advised, have not before been published. This committee consists of Henry Howard, who is controlled by the Grasselli Co., dye manufacturers; R. C. Jeffcott, who is controlled by the Calco Chemical Co., dye manufacturers; Henry L. Blum, who is supposed to have been nominated by the Du Pont interests and is controlled by them; George P. Adamson, who is controlled by the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation, dye manufacturers; James T. Pardee, who is controlled by the Dow Chemical Co., dye manufacturers; William J. Schieffelin, of Schieffelin Co., chemical manufacturers; E. A. Colby, of Baker & Co., chemical manufacturers; and F. S. Norton, of the Permutlit Co., chemical manufacturers. These are the men and the interests which control the Chemical Foundation, collect royalties on the patents which this corporation appropriated and converted to its private uses, and which expends these royalties in propaganda for a dye embargo. Not only has this corporation expended its capital stock and royalties in embargo propaganda but it has also created a deficit against the corporation of $123,465.50 in the same vicious activity.

The President of the United States on July 1, 1922, as I have already noted, instructed Col. Thomas W. Miller, Alien Property Custodian, to make demand upon the Chemical Foundation for the immediate return and transfer to the Alien Property Custodian of all patents, trade-marks, copyrights, contracts which the Chemical Foundation claims to have obtained from the Alien Property Custodian, and further to demand an accounting of all the rents, profits, and license fees realized by said Chemical Foundation from licenses for the use of such patents. It has been announced by the president of the Chemical Foundation that he will not comply with the demand of the President of the United States.

Mr. Garvan stated, and I think Mr. Palmer did at the outset, that the Alien Property Custodian held this property as a "common-law trustee." Since the passage in England of the statute of uses, with which lawyers are familiar, there is some question as to whether he was a common-law trustee in the true sense. At any rate, he was an equitable, or a statutory, trustee; and the United States did hold the property as trustee for the owners, and we ought to enforce the trust in a legitimate and in a proper way. It is now stated that this property has been transferred to the Chemical Foundation in trust for the American people. I should like to know how that trust is to be enforced. The stock is divided into two classes—preferred and common. The preferred stock has no voting power. The common stock is to be voted by certain trustees, who hold for a number of years. They can vote as they please. It is a serious question whether any court can determine what they shall do, how they shall vote, whom they shall put at their head.

Who has the power to control the Chemical Foundation? The United States? I doubt it. Who can enforce this nebulous trust which has been spoken of?

There is no express trust created by contract which any court of the land could enforce at the suit of any aggrieved person. Indeed, the beneficiaries of this alleged trust are not determined. If this trust is for the benefit of the industries of the United States, as is professed by the Chemical Foundation, the Congress of the United States and the Government of the United States would be concerned with the enforcement of the trust, and if it were the intention of the Government to subject these patents to a trust for the benefit of the industries of the country it is not to be supposed that Congress would make a mere private corporation, having articles which may be amended at will and which should be otherwise irresponsible to God, the people, or the Government, the agency of the Government for the administration of such trust. If there is any trust which is attached to the holding of these patents by the Chemical Foundation, the Government of the United States was the creator of the trust; and if there is any trust attached to the holding of these patents by the Chemical Foundation, that trust is in favor of the people of the United States, for whom the Government of the United States alone can speak and act.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to inquire, if the Senator has examined into it, whether or not they are acting under a charter?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. In what State was it granted?

Mr. KING. Delaware.

Mr. OVERMAN. Has the charter been put in the RECORD?

Mr. KING. It is in the hearings before the committees, not here.

Mr. OVERMAN. I remember that a committee was appointed, following a resolution which the Senator offered, to investigate this whole matter. Does the Senator know whether or not that committee have reported?

Mr. KING. No; they have not.

So, whether this trust is to be enforced by the creator of the trust or by the beneficiaries of the trust, it is the Government of the United States which is concerned with the enforcement. It remains to be seen whether Otto T. Bannard, Cleveland H. Dodge, George L. Ingraham, Benjamin Griswold, jr., and Bradley W. Palmer, who have the voting shares of the Chemical Foundation in their hands, will recognize the sovereign and the equitable rights of the Government of the United States in this matter and will exercise their powers to bring about a compliance with the demands of the President of the United States in the premises. It remains to be seen as to whether or not these men have a personal allegiance to the president of the Chemical Foundation which is higher in their consciences and estimation than is their allegiance to the Government of the United States. These men, these trustees of the Chemical Foundation, have a right and have the power to elect a man as president of the Chemical Foundation who will represent their views and wishes in this matter and who will comply with the demand of the President of the United States, if it be the will of the board of trustees that the demand of the President of the United States be complied with. These men profess to have no personal interest in the shares of stock they hold in trust. They claim to have no personal interest in profits or royalties or in any of the benefits which may arise from the holding of these patents. If these men are true to their professions and have no concern, except with the public interest and the public rights, they will respond to the demand of the Government of the United States that these public rights be again reposed in the Government from which they were derived by private and questionable methods—methods that no one will justify, except from the standpoint of personal interest. If the men who control the Chemical Foundation have no personal interest to serve, and yet refuse to recognize the public rights in this matter, their professions are mere pretense and they are dominated by personal interests and are invoking the protection of the courts not for the protection of any trust but for the retention of mere personal property and property interests. The board of trustees must act in this matter. They are the only persons who are free to act. The advisory committee is appointed by the president of the Chemical Foundation and is absolutely under his personal domination.

AMERICAN DYES INSTITUTE.

It was the American Dyes Institute which raised the initial capital for the Chemical Foundation and which advanced money to search the records of the Patent Office in order to compile the list of German patents which were to be seized and transferred to the Chemical Foundation. To be more precise, it was the Du Pont Co., a member of the Dyes Institute, which advanced this money and which offered to underwrite the capital of the Chemical Foundation which was not subscribed by other chemical and dye-making concerns. And it is reported that the Du Pont Co. actually did underwrite one-fourth of the capital of the Chemical Foundation.

The American Dyes Institute is a combination of the greater part of the dye-manufacturing concerns in this country. It is one of these illegal open-price associations such as was declared to be a conspiracy in violation of the antitrust act in the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the American Column & Lumber Co. et al. against the United States.

Prior to the organization of the American Dyes Institute in the spring of 1918 the dye trade was organized under a trade association called the American Dyestuff Manufacturers' Association. This was the ordinary trade association. It had no so-called "open-price policy." It did not concern itself with prices or with the allocation of trade territory or the restriction of production or the control of markets or with other practices in contravention of law and public policy. But this was before the arrival of these parvenues in the dye business, who can think only in terms of embargoes, monopoly, and arbitrary control of prices. This old association did not serve their purposes. They therefore organized the American Dyes Institute and brought within the new organization practically all the dye-making concerns in the country. The contributions of money to the institute are based upon the current production of the members, and as the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation and the E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. control 60 per cent at least of the current production their contributions to the American Dyes Institute furnish the larger part of its funds and give these great corporations a dominance in its affairs.

Let me say, Mr. President, that I have examined the report which has been submitted, and it shows that the Du Pont Co. and the Allied Chemical Co. paid in assessments to the Dyes Institute, and the assessments have been used for propaganda purposes, as I recall, in the neighborhood of $25,000 in one year in the case of the first company, and in the case of the latter some twelve or fifteen thousand dollars.

The executive committee of the American Dyes Institute consists of the following persons:

Morris R. Poucher, chairman, representative of the Du Pont interests.
R. T. Baldwin, of the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation.
A. C. Burrage, jr., of the Atlantic Dyestuff Corporation.
E. H. Killheffer, of the Newport Chemical Works.
J. M. Matthews, of the Grasselli Chemical Co.
August Merz, of Heller & Merz.
Charles H. Herty, president of the Synthetic Organic Chemical Manufacturers' Association of America.

In the investigations of these various companies, and the activities of the dye monopolies, Mr. Charles H. Herty always appears. He is one of the go-betweens, one of the connecting links, binding these organizations and conspirators together.

Since the activities of the American Dye Institute have been made known to the public and the nature of the organization has become the subject of investigation, an effort has been made to abandon it, or at any rate it has become more or less moribund. It was an illegal organization and was organized in the interest of the conspiracy to create a dye monopoly. However, as I shall show, another organization has taken its place, seeking to bring about the same objects.

Mr. Morris R. Poucher, representing the Du Pont interests, and Mr. R. T. Baldwin, representing the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation, dominating members of the executive committee of the American Dyes Institute, together with August Merz and Charles H. Herty, whom they control and who are also members of the executive committee of the American Dyes Institute, are members of the dyes advisory committee of the Textile Alliance, and are members of the advisory committee of the Dye and Chemical Control Section of the Treasury Department, which administers the dye and chemical embargo under the emergency tariff act. These same gentlemen were members of the advisory committee of the War Trade Board Section of the State Department, and before that they were members of the advisory committee of the War Trade Board, which had control of imports and exports under the trading with the enemy act. We have here a perfect exemplification of community and combination of interests, of private interests to control the policy of the Government.

So, Mr. President, an examination shows that these individuals and associations and organizations are all tied together. The Chemical Foundation, the Dyes Institute and the agencies in the War Trade Board when it was functioning and the Treasury Department which deal with licenses and the importation of dyes—all these forces are arrayed together to promote the interests of the dye monopoly to control the importation of dyes, if any shall be permitted, and to place in the hands of the local dye producers the absolute control of the domestic market.

The work of inaugurating the American Dyes Institute was delegated to Mr. Arthur J. Eddy, the inventor of the now notorious Open Price Policy Associations which have been declared illegal by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Everybody is familiar with the so-called Eddy plan; it has been investigated by the Federal Trade Commission, which recently submitted, as I am advised, 62 reports to the Attorney General showing flagrant violations of the Sherman antitrust law by corporations which have been organized under this Eddy plan. Mr. Eddy organized numerous associations of this character but he was particularly interested in the American Dyes Institute, because he became the active secretary and counsel of the open price section of the institute at a salary of $10,000 per annum.

The illegal character of the American Dyes Institute, of which over 90 per cent of the dye-making concerns of the country were members, is revealed in the constitution and by-laws of the institute. The institute was verily born in sin and conceived in iniquity. It was inherently an illegal association under the very articles which constituted its organization. I desire to direct the attention of the Senate to some of the articles of the constitution of the American Dyes Institute which bring into bold relief the illegality and iniquity in which this organization was conceived.

Mr. President, I have the articles of incorporation of the Dyes Institute, and ask, without reading, that they may be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCCORMICK in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Sections C, D, E, F, and G of article 2 of the constitution of the American Dyes Institute define the objects of the institute as follows:

"C. To collect and disseminate accurate information relating to the manufacture and sale of dyes and chemicals and kindred products, to the end that each manufacturer, whatever his output, may be on equal footing with other manufacturers with respect to the data necessary for the intelligent conduct of his business, on the belief that a policy of publicity in trade is better than one of secrecy, and in the hope that through the distribution of authentic and statistical information manufacturers may be enabled more accurately to gauge the flow of supply and demand, and thereby keep their works in more constant operation and give labor more steady employment.

"D. To devise a scientific system of cost accounting to the end that everyone engaged in the industry may accurately know the cost of his output. In this connection it is not the purpose of the institute to impose upon any member any cost items or to use in any manner the cost system as a means for controlling prices.

"E. The bringing out into the open of all competition conditions and the introduction of the open-price policy, to the end that whatever price information is distributed will be absolutely accurate and confined to sales and prices that have been actually made. Nothing herein stated permits any member of the institute to file any information regarding any price he expects to make or would like to obtain.

"G. The standardization so far as practical of dyes, to the end that wasteful duplications and wasteful production of many shades differing very slightly one from the other may be eliminated or minimized and also to the end that the manufacturer best situated and best equipped to produce certain dyes may confine his attention as far as possible to the dyes he can most economically produce.

"It is a fact at the present time that with the rapid growth of the industry due to war conditions manufacturers are attempting to produce a variety of dyes much larger in number than they can possibly hope to produce and sell under normal peace conditions; therefore the conservation of resources and the firm establishment of the industry demand that the most each manufacturer may have for making a particular product. Without attempting any arbitrary allotment or apportionment of the business, the development of accurate cost and price statistics will enable each manufacturer to determine for himself wherein he can supply the public at the lowest cost.

"No penalties.—There are no penalties of any kind or character connected with the operation of the institute. Members may or may not file information called for by the reporting plan hereinafter set forth; if they do not file they get no information; if they do file, they get like information in return."

Mr. KING. The mechanics of the open-price scheme, designed to eliminate competitive prices in the trade and to bring about an effectual agreement as to prices, and thus pursue a price-fixing policy, are set out in the by-laws of the American Dyes Institute under the titles "Reporting plan," "Production statistics," and "Daily bulletin." I have the by-laws and certain bulletins which I ask, without reading, to have inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Reporting plan: The following plan is suggested for the gathering and distribution of accurate production and price information:

"For the time being the reporting plan covers only dyes and intermediates.

"1. Contracts: Each member will file with the secretary on April 1, 1918, copies of, or full particulars regarding, all his contracts then outstanding for dyes and intermediates. This information will be immediately interchanged by the secretary among members filing contracts with the same customer, covering substantially the same materials.

"2. On and after April 1, 1918, each member will file daily a copy of every contract which he may make and this information will be immediately interchanged among members who have on file, or who make contracts with the same customer for substantially the same dyes or intermediates.

"3. Orders: Each member will file from day to day a copy of every order he books for dyes or intermediates, beginning with April 1, 1918.

"If any special terms, concessions, or inducements of any kind or nature are given to secure the order, same must be reported in detail with the order.

"This information will be interchanged among members—

"(a) Who have contracts in effect with, or

"(b) Who file orders from the same customer for substantially the same materials.

"4. Quotations: On and after April 1, 1918, each member will report to the secretary each day full particulars regarding every quotation, verbal or written, he or any of his representatives may make on dyes or intermediates. If quotations are made verbally, members are earnestly urged, as a matter of sound business practice, to confirm such quotations in writing and send a copy of such confirmation to the secretary.

"This information will be interchanged among members—

"(a) Who quote the same customer upon substantially the same dyes or intermediates;

"(b) Also with members who have on file contracts with the same customer covering substantially the same materials;

"(c) Also among members who have on file unfilled orders from the same customer covering substantially the same materials.

"(But to simplify the exchange at the outset and until further directed, the secretary will not exchange (b) contracts, (c) orders on file with quotations; that is to say, orders and contracts with the same customer covering substantially the same materials will be interchanged, but at the outset a quotation to a customer will not entitle the party quoting to information regarding actual orders and contracts on file with that customer even though they cover substantially the same materials.)

"It will thus be seen from the paragraphs providing for interchanges of information regarding contracts, orders, and quotations that no information regarding any contract, order, or quotation filed by a member is sent to any other member unless such other member has on file a contract, order, or quotation to the same customer covering substantially the same dyes and intermediates.

"The complete filing and prompt distribution of the information covered in paragraphs 1 to 4, inclusive, will not only make a valuable statistical price record in the secretary's office, which will be available at all times to the Federal Trade Commission, the Tariff Commission, and any committee of Congress interested in fostering the American dye industry, but it will also tend to minimize speculative and over buying, which is one of the evils of the industry at the present moment, and unless eliminated no accurate statistics regarding the real requirements of the industry can be compiled.

"It is important that each member in filing his reports of contracts, orders, and quotations so describe his product that the secretary can identify same correctly and make the proper interchanges. If the secretary is in doubt regarding the substantial identity of the products covered by any two or more contracts, orders, or quotations, he will not make the interchange but will ask the members to describe more particularly the products intended to be covered.

"There is nothing in the plan or workings of the institute to directly or indirectly deter members from making such prices and such terms and such changes in same as each sees fit. After a member receives through the operation of the reporting plan information regarding another member's prices or terms and finds some are lower than his own, he is at liberty to change his own prices and terms as many times as he sees fit, precisely as if the institute did not exist.

"In the event any member revises his own prices and terms, after receiving information through the open-price plan regarding the prices and terms of other members, he will, in all fairness, immediately file his changes and provisions, to the end that such other members may have opportunities to revise their prices and still further compete for the particular business.

"In the event that any member sees fit to withhold any information regarding his quotations or orders, he is at full liberty to do so, but if he does do so he will notify the Secretary to that effect, and notice will be sent to the other members, and there will be no price information interchangeable with that member until he notifies the secretary that he resumes.

"(NOTE.—No information regarding prices or revisions thereof are sent to the secretary in advance of the actual making or mailing of same to customer.)

"On Government orders and contracts let by States, cities, and public corporations generally the bids, if filed, will be held by the secretary, and no information interchanged or given out until after the day and hour fixed by the public body for opening and letting.

"Inasmuch as it is the object of the institute to induce private parties to adopt the open policy pursued by the Government, it is provided that where any buyer or purchasing agent pursues the Government policy, namely, asks for bids in good faith, naming the date and hour when same will be opened, in the presence of bidders, and the order then and there given to the lowest bidder, the institute will not interchange any information regarding bids and prices until after the date and hour fixed. But where the private buyer pursues the policy of asking for bids, with no intention of letting the contracts in good faith to the lowest bidder, but with the intention of using the bids to play one bidder against another by making perhaps misleading statements regarding the bids he has received, with the result that very often the lowest bidder is induced to cut his own bid under the impression the purchaser has a lower price when he has not, the institute interchanges the information, as above described, in order that all bidders may be on a footing of equality with the purchaser in all negotiations."

PRODUCTION STATISTICS.

The following are suggestions for future consideration. At the start these reports will not be called for:

1. Each member will file on blanks to be specially prepared a weekly report of his production of each dye and intermediate.

This information the secretary will combine in a statistical summary which will show the total production of each dye and each intermediate without disclosing the date filed by each member. This weekly summary will be sent to each member.

2. A weekly report of work ahead expressed in days, weeks, or months on each class of products.

The object of this report is to show in a general way, but also as accurately as possible, about how many days', weeks', or months' work ahead each member has for a particular dye or intermediate or a particular class of dyes or intermediates as may be most convenient. Suitable blanks will be worked out and distributed to the members.

This information the secretary will compile on a sheet which will give the name of each member, with the work ahead such member has for each particular class of dyes and intermediates, and copies of said sheets will be mailed to all members.

At the outset it can not be too often repeated that members may or may not file the information covered by the reporting plan, and all arguments against filing information are best answered by the simple statement, "If you do not wish to file, there is no obligation to do so." But each member will state of record on the minutes to what extent he does or does not file, so there may be no misapprehension regarding the attitude of his company.

DAILY BULLETIN.

When the daily bulletin will commence will be decided at a future meeting.

The secretary will compile at the close of each day a brief bulletin, which will show all quotations, orders, and contracts filed in his office during the 24 hours previous, and a copy of this bulletin will be sent to each member, whether such member is filing any information or not. The bulletin will not give the name of either the members who file the price information or customers to whom prices are made. It will simply show under the head of "Quotations" all the different quotations made during the 24 hours previous on all the dyes and intermediates covered, and under the head of "Closed business" all prices obtained in orders and contracts filed.

If all manufacturers contribute to the reporting plan, it is obvious that this bulletin will be very much like the reports of the New York Stock Exchange, showing simply so many closed transactions, with the amounts and the prices but without the names of either sellers or buyers. It would go one step further than the stock exchange report in that it would also show all quotations—offers to sell—without the name of the manufacturer quoting or the customer to whom the quotation is made.

In short, the bulletin is a daily price current made up from actual prices.

Mr. KING. It is perfectly obvious that the foregoing stipulations in the articles and by-laws of the American Dyes Institute embody a scheme to circumvent the antitrust laws. The open-price policy, so called, is indeed the latest invention for this purpose, a situation which has not escaped the attention of the courts to which such contracts have been brought for the purpose of determining whether or not they constitute a violation of law. The fine phrases in which objects of the institute are set forth in article 2 are but a patent camouflage to cover plans for the fixing and maintenance of the price of dyes, of restricting and controlling production, of assigning different branches of manufacture to different companies and plants, and for allocating territory to the different members of the institute engaged in the trade. In other words, we are to have a private agency here regulating and controlling the dye trade; not in the public interest, but against the public interest. The whole scheme, in my opinion, is a conspiracy against the public.

For the purpose of exemplifying the methods of operation of the open-price section of the institute I will insert in the RECORD the Daily Bulletin of Prices, No. 92, for the date of February 4, 1919, showing the sales, quantity sold, and prices obtained for that day. It was sent to members of the American Dyes Institute from the offices of the institute, 320 Broadway, New York City.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KING. The condition of affairs in the dye market, particularly the high, artificial level of prices, is due largely to the fact that the dye market is a closed and a controlled market, which prevents dye prices finding their proper economic exchange level, as in the case of other commodities of wide general use in the country, which I have referred to in the list which I have put in the RECORD.

To be more specific, this is all the result of the existing embargo, of the dye licensing law, of the machinations of the Textile Alliance and the Chemical Foundation, and particularly of the open-price scheme of the American Dyes Institute, which is the agency of the dye combination. Of course, the public pays the bill. As monopoly grows by what it feeds on, it is expending its surplus of illegal gains in lobbying and propaganda to further expand and perpetuate its illegal gains and its control of the domestic dye trade.

In the early part of 1919 the American Dyes Institute commenced an active campaign for the enactment by Congress of an embargo or licensing system on dyestuffs. In this campaign counsel and persons to lobby in Washington were employed. Bills for a dyestuffs embargo or licensing system were drafted, and persistent efforts were put forth in Washington and elsewhere to effect the passage by Congress of this new and untried, un-American policy. Resolutions declaring for an embargo or licensing system were prepared and their adoption secured. Addresses on the subject of embargo or licensing system were made before clubs, societies, trade associations, and so forth, by public speakers secured by the American Dyes Institute, and a general propaganda, consisting of pamphlets, books, and circulars, articles and statements in newspapers and periodicals, was carried on throughout the United States, the object of which was to create a public interest in and demand for an embargo or licensing system.

In my opinion the chief and practically the only purpose of the institute, aside from the price-fixing policy, as was indicated by the articles which I have referred to, was to expend large sums of money in such endeavor. As I have shown, a daily bulletin was published which indicated to every member of the organization the sales made, the amount received, to whom sold, and the amount that each dye man had on hand—just exactly the scheme that was pursued in the Hardwood Lumber Co. case that came under the denouncement of the Supreme Court of the United States. So that the dye manufacturers of the United States did have a monopoly, and the Dyes Institute bound them together in monopolistic control of the dye interests of the United States, the same as the Hardwood Lumber Co. of the South controlled, as held by the Supreme Court of the United States, the lumber interests of the South.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator just for this observation and a question? I have not read the hearings before the so-called Shortridge Committee; but is it not a fact—at least, I have been told that it is so—that Mr. Herman Metz, who certainly is not in favor of the building up of a great dye industry in the United States, and who certainly, as I understand, is against the embargo, testified that the competition between American manufacturers of dyes in this country was very fierce?

Mr. KING. I am told that Mr. Metz so testified. I did not hear it. I am told, too, that the Dyes Institute, because of the exposé, and the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States held that a kindred organization was illegal, had practically dissolved, and, as I have stated, organized another association, of which Mr. Herty is the president. Notwithstanding the so-called competition of which the Senator speaks, as I have shown, the prices now are from 300 to 400 per cent above pre-war prices, and in some cases 1,000 per cent above them.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Has the Senator submitted any figures to show the profits?

Mr. KING. Of what?

Mr. WADSWORTH. In the dye-making business.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there was only one man who was willing, before the Finance Committee, to state his profits. He offered to submit a full statement, but the other dye producers either declined or made no offer to do so. The single exception referred to said that he made enormous profits and was willing to submit his figures.

Mr. POMERENE. It may be of interest to say that some years ago, in the early days of the war, a question arose as to the cost of salvarsan. Mr. Metz, whose name was mentioned by the Senator from New York, appeared before the Committee on Patents. The evidence showed that at that time they were charging $4 a dose for it, and it was costing them to manufacture, according to his own statement, 33 cents, to which he added, perhaps, one-third, or 50 per cent, because there was a good deal of breakage.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator know what is charged for it to-day?

Mr. POMERENE. I do not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not give the figures, but I know it is reduced, and I have been told it is cheaper now in the United States than it was before the war.

Mr. POMERENE. At that particular time it developed that a claim was made that they had brought the secret process over here out of regard for the people of America, but I was never quite able myself to see that they were able to show very much altruism when they charged such enormous prices as they did.

Mr. KING. Let me say that some of the patents have expired, so that many products are cheaper now than in the past.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Has the patent on salvarsan expired?

Mr. KING. I am not sure about that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is what I was talking about. I wish the junior Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] were here, because the information I have upon the matter was from him, and I got the very clear impression from him that one result of the releasing to the American Chemical Industry, under license, of the patents on salvarsan and the resulting competition of a fierce character between the concerns in the manufacture of it was that the price of it to-day is lower than it was before the war, when it was sold by the Germans alone.

Mr. KING. I have no doubt that commodity prices generally throughout the world are falling. The Senator would infer, I would imagine from his statement, that he would expect no reduction in prices——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not at all. That is an unfair inference.

Mr. KING. Through the development of new industries, new processes, and so on.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The observation has been made here that this immense increase took place in the price of salvarsan, but I notice that the figure given was of a long-past date.

Mr. KING. I made no statement as to salvarsan.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from Ohio did.

Mr. KING. I will put into the RECORD the price of salvarsan before the war, during the war, and now. I thought I had the data here; I have it in my office. My recollection is that the Senator is substantially correct in saying that there has been a reduction in the price of salvarsan.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Which would indicate that there is not a monopoly holding up prices.

Mr. KING. I do not agree with the Senator at all.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If there were a monopoly able to do it, why do they not hold them up?

Mr. KING. There might be a monopoly and the prices charged, though lower than during the war, might be those fixed by a monopoly or producers having monopolistic power.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The facts in connection with it do not bear out the existence of a monopoly. Why have a monopoly if you can not control prices?

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that public opinion sometimes may scourge a thief into restitution of property and will control even the conscience of a monopolist, so that he may be forced to reduce prices. The Steel Trust was a monopoly for years and is a monopoly now, and yet, responding to the demand of outraged American people, it has been compelled to reduce some of its prices. I could mention others, but that would be a digression. Let me add, however, the price of salvarsan is now much too high and yields enormous profits to the producers.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. Yes; but I would like to hurry along.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I desire to interrupt the Senator to secure some information. The patents which have been issued, I suppose, belong to the Chemical Foundation. Who are the real people back of the Chemical Foundation? Are they the dye people, who are asking for this embargo?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. NICHOLSON. They are one and the same party?

Mr. KING. That is my contention.

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is, they are asking that these patents be turned over to them, and at the same time asking that an embargo be placed upon all importations of dyes?

Mr. KING. I want to be entirely fair——

Mr. NICHOLSON. I want to get the facts.

Mr. KING. I have covered this matter heretofore, but in response to the Senator's inquiries will traverse some of the same ground.

Treaties negotiated many years ago between the United States and Germany permitted American citizens to acquire and hold property in Germany and German citizens to acquire and hold property in the United States. Treaties also permitted the nationals of these two countries to take out patents in both countries. American citizens obtained many patents in Germany, which they still own and which were not confiscated by Germany during or since the war. These patents have been exceedingly profitable to American citizens and constitute property in the highest sense. German nationals obtained thousands of patents in the United States, some of which were exceedingly valuable. American citizens have the right to use their German patents and are exercising all authority and control over the same, deriving rents and profits and issues therefrom. We, upon the other hand, seized all of the patents taken out in this country by Germans. Among them were 4,800 patents which were seized by the Alien Property Custodian and sold to the Chemical Foundation, or rather transferred to the Chemical Foundation, for $250,000.

Mr. Garvan, who was Alien Property Custodian, and who had charge of the property of German nationals which was seized, conceived the idea of preventing the return of dye patents, many of which were of great value to their owners. He planned and conspired with others to put these patents into the control of Americans, or under the control of American corporations. It seemed to be the purpose of the Alien Property Custodian's office—and statements made by some of its officials support this view—that it was considered moral and proper to transfer as much of the seized property as possible to Americans and to prevent its restoration to the German owners. These 4,800 patents, many of them dealing with dyes, chemicals, and pharmaceuticals, and which were worth many millions of dollars—some persons stating that they were and are worth $25,000,000—were pretended to be sold to a corporation organized by Mr. Garvan, and with which he was and is connected, for $250,000.

Mr. Du Pont and certain persons interested in the manufacture of dyes and other chemicals advanced the money to ascertain from the Patent Office the number and character of these patents, and also the $250,000 with which to pay the purchase price. These dye producers then became interested in the Chemical Foundation. Ostensibly this foundation holds these patents for Americans who may desire to engage in the dye business. Theoretically the Senator from Colorado, if he desired to engage in the dye business, could obtain a license from the Chemical Foundation to use one or more of these patents.

Mr. NICHOLSON. But the dye monopoly may have access to these patents the same as any citizen of the United States.

Mr. KING. Certainly. The members of the Dyes Institute, who are the dye producers of the United States, manufacture at least 92 per cent of all of the dyes consumed in the United States, and also export millions of pounds annually. These huge corporations engaged in the manufacture of dyes, as well as drugs, medicines, paints, and thousands of other articles, are so powerful industrially and financially and are so strongly intrenched in the production of dyes and the other products manufactured by them that no one would have the courage to enter into the dye business in competition with them.

As I have heretofore shown, two of these, the Du Pont and the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation, control the intermediates out of which the dyes are manufactured; and I assert that the producers of dyes, through the Dyes Institute and their agencies and instrumentalities, constitute a monopoly and have maintained prices at from 300 to more than ,000 per cent above the level of prices obtained in the United States prior to the war. These domestic manufacturers of dyes are, as I have stated, so intrenched and have such large plants that they can produce far more than is required in the United States. There are a few dyes which require a vast amount of patience and close labor to produce. The quantity production is small but the labor cost great. American dye manufacturers who prefer quantity production do not care to manufacture this class of dyes, and never will willingly produce them.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Is it the Senator's opinion that the patents in question will be largely owned and controlled by the dye monopoly of the United States as it now exists?

Mr. KING. Yes, potentially. I repeat that no one under present conditions would care to enter into competition with them. As a matter of fact, the dye concerns actually own the stock of the Chemical Foundation, which gives the dye combine virtual control of the patents. Of course the Senator will understand that these patents cover most of the dyes, if not all produced and consumed in the United States, and if the Senator or any other person should attempt to manufacture dyes under the formula provided by any of these patents the dye manufacturers of the United States who have stock in the Chemical Foundation would bring suit or have the Chemical Foundation bring suit to enjoin the infringement of the patents. In other words, these patents give more or less of a monopoly as to the dyes covered by the patents. If any dyes are now imported into the United States they come in under the selective embargo and are subject to the will of the dye monopoly and under licenses, the terms of which it may dictate.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah does not question the legal right of the Alien Property Custodian to sell and dispose of these patents?

Mr. KING. I have not questioned the power of the Government and perhaps, strictly speaking, the right of the Government if by this word is meant the naked technical right of confiscation. Undoubtedly, under the Roman law, which was accepted by nations for centuries, the right of a nation to seize and to confiscate the property of an alien enemy was recognized. Indeed, under ancient law the right to seize an alien enemy and sell him into slavery was recognized as a right, but there came a day when this right was regarded as a wrong and the person of the individual became inviolable.

The struggle by publicists and writers on the law of nations has been to give sacredness, if I may be permitted the expression, to property and to establish an international law or custom that would make private property sacred as against claims and assertions of belligerent nations. I think Chief Justice Marshall, in the Brown case, declared that there was a technical right to confiscate the property of an enemy alien, but he denied its morality and indeed denounced it as impolitic. But even if our Government had the right to seize and dispose of the property of German nationals I deny its right to make a transfer which is fraudulent in equity and an abuse of the trust which was recognized by the Government itself when it passed the trading with the enemy act authorizing sequestration.

Mr. STERLING. The law was pretty broad to begin with.

Mr. KING. I know that—I have not denied that point.

Mr. STERLING. And then it was subsequently amended——

Mr. KING. I am familiar with that.

Mr. STERLING. So as to give the Alien Property Custodian the right to dispose of this property as though it were his own.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in my opinion Congress was not fully advised as to the unjust and anachronistic character of the law last referred to by the Senator. The Senator will recall that the provision authorizing sale by the Alien Property Custodian was a rider to an appropriation bill. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] called the attention of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Martin, now deceased] to the matter, but no debate ensued and no explanation was made. Unfortunately in war times there is much legislation enacted that later is found to have been unwise, indeed unjust. In my opinion it was improper for the Government to commit to the Alien Property Custodian the powers that were contained in the legislation mentioned. It was the exercise of a governmental power and authority which was unwarranted and which I regard as violative of accepted principles of international morality which I hope are prevalent in the world to-day.

Mr. STERLING. While it came in, as the Senator says, in an appropriation bill, it came in under an item providing for the expenses of the Alien Property Custodian, authorized by the act entitled "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes." Then, in view of the appropriation to cover those expenses is the rather long section amending a certain paragraph of the former law, in which there was given to the Alien Property Custodian full power to dispose of the property as he might choose, so far as that is concerned, dispose of it, at least, as though he were the absolute owner of any of it.

Mr. KING. I shall now return to the matter which I was considering when interrupted by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. NICHOLSON]. I called attention to the fact that Mr. Poucher was the representative of the Du Ponts, and he was also a member of the Dyes Institute; he was the representative of the War Trade Board, and it was the same Mr. Poucher who represented the Treasury Department; and Mr. Poucher also represented the State Department. He appeared before the Dyes Institute, of which he was a member, and reported his efforts to secure an embargo. We find the Du Pont companies, the Dyes Institute, the Chemical Foundation, all of these forces battering at the doors of Congress to get an embargo. Mr. du Pont appeared before the committee charged with the duty of framing a tariff bill. In answer to a question by Senator Penrose, as to "what they wanted" he said, in substance, "We want tariffs just as high as we can get them. * * * In addition to the tariffs we want an embargo. In addition to that, we want immunity from prosecution by the Attorney General in the event that we are held to be a combination in restraint of trade or a monopoly."

Mr. Poucher, representing these whole organizations and as the spokesman for the Du Ponts, made a report to the Dyes Institute, which is an organization of the domestic dye makers. He said:

The American Dyes Institute has a special legislative committee.

Let me say to Senators that the Dyes Institute spent a hundred thousand dollars here in lobbying. A Democratic lawyer got $25,000 for helping to draw the embargo bill, and Mr. Chonte, a dollar a year man, received more than $75,000 from these organizations for his lobbying activities and his work in connection with securing the embargo. Mr. Ramsey Huguet, who was another dollar a year man, working with Mr. Garvan, got $50,000 for his activities in working out this scheme.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Suppose all these things the Senator says about the Chemical Foundation be true——

Mr. KING. And the Dyes Institute.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. And the Dyes Institute.

Mr. KING. And the Textile Alliance.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. And the Textile Alliance. Suppose they all be true. I deny none of them. In fact, months ago I investigated the situation and practically reported the same things. What has that to do with the tariff on dyes?

Mr. KING. Let me ask this of the Senator. Suppose the Senator were sitting as a judge to determine whether a given transaction was fair or whether a conspiracy had been entered into to perpetrate a fraud. Is it not clear that it would be the duty of the court to receive evidence tending to show such combination or conspiracy? If the court found a conspiracy to perpetrate a fraud, it would aid materially in passing upon the ultimate facts and the real issue calling for judicial action. Perhaps the supposititious case just suggested is not parallel to the question before us, but it possesses the value that analogies furnish. Here we have a number of corporations, associations, and individuals working together for years, spending large sums of money, employing agents, attorneys, and lobbyists for the purpose of securing legislation which will enable a few corporations to enjoy a complete monopoly in the manufacture and sale of dyes and thousands of medicines, drugs, and chemical compounds. I submit it is important to show the nature of this combination, who the persons are, the ties which bind them, the nature of their activities, and the benefits which are to be derived and by whom, when legislation is sought or is projected. Not only Congress but the country are entitled to know who seeks legislation, what interests are behind it, what the motives are, whether there are lobbyists favoring it, and if so who the lobbyists are, and who pays them. We find great corporations such as the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation, one of whose subsidiary corporations was declared to be a trust, and the great Du Pont interests, one of whose subsidiary corporations was also declared to be a trust, participating in the organization of the Dyes Institute, largely controlling its activities, putting up money to aid it in its propaganda, nation-wide, in behalf of an embargo, and also connected with the Chemical Foundation and becoming beneficiaries of the activities of this corporation. I say, we find these corporations and other organizations closely combined and confederated with scores of agents, attorneys, and representatives invading Washington and Congress and committees for practically two years in behalf of certain legislation. I repeat, it is important when the legislation which these forces demand is under consideration, and before it is passed, that we know all that we can about the organizations and corporations and forces behind the projected legislation.

I am glad that the Senator practically admits the charges which I have made as to the conspiracy of these associations, corporations, and individuals, and as to their seeking a monopoly. As I understood the Senator, he stated that he had investigated the situation and had practically reported the things which I have charged to be true. But, assuming that all these matters have no influence upon Congress in determining the character of legislation to be enacted, I insist that this information is germane, and not only Congress but the country is entitled to it. However, let me say to the Senator that these conspirators, as I have denominated them, and lobbyists and organizations have been powerful enough to have written into the bill before us provisions dealing with dyes and thousands of drugs and medicines which give to the dye monopoly and the corporations interested a practical monopoly in the domestic market.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Let me interrupt right here.

Mr. KING. Speaking for myself, I do not think the embargo provisions have strengthened the bill in the interest of those seeking an embargo. In other words, the rates found in paragraphs 25 and 26, as to most articles and commodities, will be prohibitive.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Is the Senator for those rates?

Mr. KING. No.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Certainly not.

Mr. KING. Because they will create a monopoly.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Is the Senator for any degree of protection to the American dye industry?

Mr. KING. I have heretofore stated that I would adhere to the policy announced by my party on this question, and I stated before the Shortridge committee that the question of a reasonable rate was not involved. I would not oppose a reasonable tariff duty upon dyes.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. The very brilliant Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], who delighted us this morning with his very caustic references to these various organizations, announced that he is for these rates——

Mr. KING. I am not, because they are too high.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. But that at the same time he is against the embargo for one year. Now, the Senator, reasoning from the same facts and from the same conditions, is not for the rates.

Mr. KING. I said those rates were too high when we were discussing them some time ago.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. But the Senator is not for the rates?

Mr. KING. Not for those rates.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Those are the rates about which we are talking.

Mr. KING. But that is res adjudicata, so to speak, now; it is un fait accompli. We have fixed those rates.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. That is still to be voted on.

Mr. KING. Oh, no; we passed that part of the bill some time ago. I regard that as ended. The Senator has won that great victory, and the dye interests of the United States ought to be entirely satisfied when they have what I think will prove an effectual embargo under the rates he has given them.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Let me state what I am trying to get at. Here is a certain industry working in the United States, with a very large investment, built up because of the prohibition afforded by the war. I think the Senator agrees to that?

Mr. KING. In part, I agree with what the Senator says.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. The question is, How is that to be maintained? I am not going into the proposition of the Chemical Foundation, or any of its activities in the past, or the Textile Alliance or any of its activities. Here is an existing industry. The question is whether or not it can be maintained by a tariff or by an embargo. That seems to me to be the question. We are not going into the past. Of course, those people have been laboring for an embargo, and of course they have been working for these rates. If they do not work for these rates, who on earth will?

The Senator and a great many of his people have been fighting them all the time. As a matter of course they are bound to make a defense unless they simply quit. They have a vast sum of money invested, many men employed, and this great industry now going. They must defend it or abandon the whole thing. Their contention is, as I understand, that they can not successfully operate without an embargo for another year. In fact, they want an embargo for a longer period.

That, Mr. President, is my viewpoint.

Mr. KING. I understand the Senator and respect his sincerity and frankness and the manner in which he meets problems presented for consideration. We always know where to find him, and I, of course, can not have any controversy with him because of his views upon any question or his attitude toward public matters, although I may differ from him as I do in regard to the matter now before us.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I thank the Senator.

Mr. KING. There is a wide difference of opinion between the Senator and myself as to the method of dealing with this question. The Senator believes an embargo is necessary. I do not, and I think the Senator's position is wrong. I think an embargo is un-American and is violative of those sound principles which should guide in enacting either revenue or tariff or fiscal legislation. Embargoes smack too much of despotic governments and of the abuse of executive or legislative authority. They spell monopoly. They are intended to create monopolies and to give to those who enjoy the monopoly advantages over the consumers. I insist that embargoes are fundamentally at variance with the accepted Republican view of protection. The ablest exponents of protection deny that they want to prohibit importations and to erect barriers which constitute embargoes. They justify protective tariffs upon the theory of establishing infant industries, or of enabling the domestic producer to compete with foreign producers. They insist that the wages paid in the United States are higher than those paid abroad and that a tariff must be levied to compensate for such differences in wages.

But I am also opposed to the embargo provisions of this bill, because they will prove to be practically superfluous for the reason that the rates fixed in paragraphs 25 and 26 are so high as to enable the domestic manufacturers of dyes, drugs, and medicines to not only compete with foreign manufacturers but to rob and exploit the American consumers.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a further interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. EDGE in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield further to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. KING. I am glad to yield.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Ninety per cent of the dyes that we consume in the United States are made in the United States—I think, perhaps, 92 per cent——

Mr. KING. Yes; 92 per cent.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. The other 8 per cent, the vat dyes or anthracene colors, we do not make. The question is, Can we, without an embargo, make those dyes? Can we impose a tariff rate high enough to protect our people in the manufacture of those dyes under the theory of protection?

Mr. KING. So strongly fortified is the dye industry of the United States that it produces 92 per cent or more of all the dyes consumed in the United States and manufactures millions of pounds annually for export. Moreover, it is potentially able to supply practically the entire demands of the world. As I have indicated, there are a few dyes, requiring a vast amount of patient labor, that are not produced in the United States, and perhaps never will be produced in the United States. In nearly every commodity line, no matter how great the production may be in the United States, there are a few articles that we import, because the quantity consumed is small and the cost of production is great—the cost largely resulting from arduous, toilsome labor.

The American manufacturers in nearly all industries like large production; and many articles, upon which the labor cost is very great, they decline to manufacture and infinitely prefer to import. That is the situation in dyes.

As Senators know, there are hundreds of dyes and there are some colors, where the consumption in the United States is relatively small, that the American dye producers will never produce.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator has studied the question much more closely than I have. Does the dye embargo proposition contained in the bill confine itself to vat dyes or does it include all dyes?

Mr. KING. It is omnium gatherum.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I did not hear the question of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I asked the Senator from Utah if the embargo proposition contained in the bill applies only to vat dyes or if it applies to all dyes?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. It applies to all dyes.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is what I assumed. Now, why is it necessary to apply the embargo to all dyes when it is admitted that we make over 90 per cent of the other dyes that we consume in the country? It is said that it is necessary to have an embargo to protect the 8 per cent of the vat dyes. Why should we impose an embargo proposition that includes the whole dye production industry instead of confining it to the 8 per cent which it is said we can not produce in this country and in regard to which it is necessary to have an embargo because we can not reach that situation with a tariff. I am asking for information, Mr. President. I do not wish to engage in any controversy about the matter.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. The theory is that the synthetic chemical industry is so complex and so involved and so entirely technical in the manufacture of dyes that unless the whole of the dye industry is protected by an embargo the Germans on the other side, having the finest skilled chemists in the world, with the greatest knowledge of chemistry and the composition of those dyes, can, simply by altering certain dyes or the processes by which certain dyes are made, introduce them into the United States in substitution even for the 90 per cent we are making. That will continue to be the case until the dye industry of the country is finally and firmly established beyond all doubt. That is their theory. The Senator recalls all the testimony. He sat as a member of the subcommittee, with the Senator from Kansas (Mr. CURTIS) and myself, and heard the testimony, and I think at that time the Senator rather favored the embargo himself during the war. Is not that true?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Did not the Senator on the floor make a speech in favor of the embargo?

Mr. SIMMONS. I have gone over all that to-day. I always supported the embargo during the war, and I said I would support it until you could frame a permanent tariff bill. That has been my position about it all the time.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I understand. The Senator was perfectly frank and candid about it all the while; but, nevertheless, he favored the principle of the embargo, because, evidently, he then believed, as we believed, that the embargo was essential to the full protection of the industry in the United States until such time as we could compete with the world in the manufacture of those dyes, which could be done only by building up the synthetic chemical industry in the United States and developing skilled chemists equal at least to those in Germany. It is not the work of a day, I will say to my very good and able friend from Utah; it is the work of many, many years of the hardest and most laborious study to which the minds of men can be put.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, if I may be permitted an interruption——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. The impression, I think, goes out, from what is stated here time and time again, that this is an absolute embargo.

Mr. KING. Oh, well, it amounts to that.

Mr. STERLING. The provision in section 321 of the pending bill simply reenacts the present law, and that makes certain exceptions. It is what might be termed, I suppose, a selective embargo, or selective imports.

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator that that was discussed very fully by the able Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES].

Mr. STERLING. May I just read the section of the emergency tariff not referring to dyes and chemicals?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. STERLING. It is as follows:

SEC. 501. (a) That on and after the day following the enactment of this act, for the period of three months, no sodium nitrite, no dyes or dyestuffs, including crudes and intermediates, no product or products derived directly or indirectly from coal tar (including crudes, intermediates, finished or partly finished products, and mixtures and compounds of such coal-tar products), and no synthetic organic drugs or synthetic organic chemicals, shall be admitted to entry or delivered from customs custody in the United States or in any of its possessions unless the Secretary determines that such article or a satisfactory substitute therefor is not obtainable in the United States or in any of its possessions in sufficient quantities and on reasonable terms as to quality, price and delivery, and that such article in the quantity, to be admitted is required for consumption by an actual consumer in the United States or in any of its possessions within six months after receipt of the merchandise.

So that permits to come into the country anything that we can not produce in the country.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, that proposition was critically examined and ably discussed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES]. His position was that the selective embargo provision just read has been so construed as to be a practical embargo whenever desired. The obstacles and impediments imposed by the departments and by the representatives of the dye industry who have practically controlled the executive officials, have made the importation of the few dyes not produced in the United States practically impossible, or at any rate impossible, except where assented to by the domestic dye producers.

The construction placed upon this act by the Treasury officials and other persons having to do with the granting of licenses has put it into the power of the domestic manufacturer to determine when and under what circumstances imports might be had. The act has been so construed that great discretion is given to these officials and their advisers who have usually been representatives of the dye manufacturers to determine whether similar or suitable dyes could be found in the United States. Their decision has been final and their delays in deciding have not only frequently caused damage to the textile interests of the United States but have resulted in bringing about a recision of the application for an importers' license.

Mr. President, I do not agree with the position of the Senator from Indiana that an embargo should be placed upon all dyes because 8 per cent or less of the dyes consumed in the United States are imported. As stated, the imported dyes could be produced if the domestic manufacturers cared to do so. It is not so much a question of technical skill, as the Senator stated, that leads the American producer to omit their manufacture. The dyes are so varied and the quantity of each dye is so small that the American manufacturer does not care to engage in their production. In other words, there would be no profit in these few dyes. A textile mill would perhaps purchase during the year but a few hundred or a few thousand pounds at the most; whereas, the same textile manufacturing plant would consume hundreds of thousands and perhaps millions of pounds of other dyes. Nor do I agree with the Senator that Germany's chemical industry is more highly developed than ours, or that the German chemists are superior to those of the United States. I think in all branches of chemistry the American chemists equal, and in many instances surpass, the chemists in any other country in the world.

The facilities in the United States for the production of chemicals are superior to those in any other country and it is, I think, somewhat of an aspersion upon the chemical industry and those engaged in the same, as well as the chemists of the United States, to attribute to Germany the superiority which so many are doing. Nor do I assent to the inferences that flow from the Senator's statement that the chemical industry is not firmly established in the United States. We have a synthetic chemical industry which is equal to and indeed superior to that of Germany. As I have repeatedly stated, this industry is strongly intrenched. It has hundreds of millions of dollars at its command and has the most efficient and perhaps the most extensive chemical plants in the world. I have shown that one company, the Allied Chemical and Dye Corporation, has assets of a greater value than those of the combined dye manufacturing plants of Germany.

As I have shown, Germany has but 12 dye manufacturing companies—we have scores and our production of intermediates and our facilities for the production of intermediates are greater than those of Germany and all other countries combined. The domestic industry is so powerful that it has competed, and can now compete, in the world markets, with Germany or any other country, in those dyes which fall within the class of which the United States produces 92 per cent of the domestic consumption. There are those that would have us believe that synthetic chemistry, as the Senator calls it, is something new and mysterious and not studied by American chemists. Mr. President, synthetic compounds, whether organic or otherwise, whether produced from coal-tar products or their derivatives, have been known to the United States and to our chemists for years, and we can march abreast, if not in front, of any other nation in the production of all synthetic chemicals, whether dyes, medicines, drugs, or any other chemical.

The remarks of the Senator from Indiana compel me to refer to other products than dyes embraced within the embargo. The embargo covers, as I have heretofore stated, not alone dyes but thousands of medicines and drugs and other chemical products. I examined, a few days ago, the United States Dispensatory, containing four or five thousand pages, and I also examined the United States Pharmacopoeia and the National Formulary books, containing hundreds of pages in the aggregate. With my limited knowledge of chemistry and drugs and medicines, I discovered that there are literally hundreds of chemicals, drugs, and elixirs that are contained within the embargo. Under the guise of giving a monopoly to the domestic producers of dyes, it is proposed to give a monopoly to domestic manufacturers of thousands of the most important drugs and medicines.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question at this point?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Originally did the manufacture of the drugs to which he refers grow out of the dye industry or are they related to the dye industry?

Mr. KING. Many of these drugs and medicinals were produced in the United States before the coal-tar dye industry was developed or entered upon, but they come within the comprehensive language of the embargo as found in the emergency tariff act which is imported and carried into the pending bill.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. In other words, what I am trying to get at is this: Do we embargo by the proposed measure any medicines that did not originally grow out of the dye industry?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Has the Senator a list of those?

Mr. KING. I have here a list of hundreds of drugs and medicines, some of which I am sure are not coal-tar products. The words "synthetic-organic compounds" include, in addition to coal-tar products, all other carbon compounds which are derived or manufactured from products not found naturally in coal tar. This phrase "synthetic-organic compounds" embraces all carbon compounds not found as such in nature. Chemists classify organic compounds into two principal subdivisions, namely, alpha or open-chain compounds and aromatic or closed-chain compounds. The organic compounds embraced in the latter subdivision are coal-tar products. It is therefore evident that the phrase is much broader in its scope and embraces other than coal-tar products. If it is the intention to embargo only coal-tar products, then the phrase "synthetic-organic compounds" is entirely too broad. I have repeatedly said that, in my opinion, it was never intended to lay an embargo upon anything but coal-tar dyes. It was never intended by the overwhelming majority of the Senators and Congressmen to prohibit the importation of drugs, chemicals, and medicines.

To illustrate what this embargo does, let me call the Senator's attention to aromatic vinegar. That is a synthetic compound as interpreted by the Treasury Department. So, also, is phenolated water. Caffeine sodiosalicylate, which is an important medicine, falls within the phrase "synthetic-organic compounds." Camphor cerate as well as all esters and cerate of lead subacetate may not be imported.

This last-named article may be used in painting or for medicinal purposes, but it is under the embargo. Camphorated chloral is embargoed. Iodine collodion, iodoform collodion, compound salicylic collodion, styptic collodion, croton oil collodion, compound elixir of almond—these are all embargoed. The senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] will be glad that the latter is within the embargo as we get into the field of almonds in his State. That is a synthetic compound and it is embargoed. Elixir of anise and their elixirs fall within the prohibition. Elixir of formates, compound elixir of sodium salicylate, elixir of terpin hydrate and codeine, compound elixir of vanillin are all embargoed. It is admitted that vanillin is interdicted and that it is used for a multitude of purposes.

Camphorated brown plaster; liniment of ammonium iodide; compound liniment of opium; camphorated soap liniment, which is a synthetic compound—compound liniment of mustard—acetic turpentine liniment, another snythetic compound—solution of aluminum acetico-tartrate; liquor alumini acetatis, alkaline antiseptic solution, solution of peptonate of iron, a medicine which is taken by many people as a remedy for an anemic condition, these all are under the embargo.

Solution of ferric salicylate, compound solution of hydrastine; phenolated solution of iodine, antiseptic solution of pepsin—which is a synthetic compound—are banned. Coal-tar solution, compound solution of sodium borate, which is used in many products, as the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] will recognize; compound solution of zinc and aluminum, compound solution of zinc and iron, ammoniated camphor wash, camphorated menthal, astringent mixture, acid camphor mixture, aromatic camphor mixture, compound mixture of chloral and potassium bromide—all medicines of importance—compound mixture of chloroform and morphine; mixture of oil of tar; compound mixture of opium and chloroform—which is used in hospitals for medicinal purposes; compound mixture of opium and rhubarb; aromatic oil spray; compound menthol spray; aromatic castor oil; betanaphthol petroxolin; iodoform petroxolin; methyl salicylate petroxolin; camphorated phenol petroxolin; antiperiodic pills; pills of opium and camphor; compound acetanilid powder; soluble antiseptic powder, compound powder of talc, sodium boro-benzoate, compound spirit of cardamon, compound spirit of vanillin, stilus acidi salicylici dilubilis—which is a very important drug; sirup of garlic; compound sirup of senna; antiperiodic tincture; compound tincture of kino and opium; pectoral tincture; troches of charcoal; troches of phenolphthalein; troches of quinine tannate; troches of santonin; troches of elm; camphor ointment; brown ointment; ointment of lead iodide; these and hundreds of other articles are to be excluded from the United States to satisfy the greedy demands of the dye monopoly and its associated interests.

It had been assumed by some Senators and Representatives who were willing to support a measure for an embargo for a limited period that it was distinctively and exclusively a dye embargo imposed to foster what was alleged to be an infant dye industry in this country. The proposition for an embargo, as understood, was associated with the coal-tar dyes and derivatives, and no one contended that there was any reason to extend the embargo beyond dyes produced from coal tars. But the construction placed upon the emergency tariff act, doubtless the one which was intended by the dye lobbyists, in its administration by the Treasury Department, was very much broader and included, as I have indicated, drugs, medicinals, and natural dyes, and other chemical compounds.

It is worthy of note that the embargo originally provided in the pending bill, and as reported from the House Committee, was to be confined in its operation to the articles specified in paragraphs 25 and 26 of the pending bill—articles which all know are coal-tar products.

In interpreting the emergency tariff act and in construing the words "synthetic organic chemicals" the Treasury Department, in paragraph 8 of decision 38799, promulgated July 21, 1921, held that—

The wording includes natural dyes and dyestuffs, such as logwood, cochineal, fustic, cutch, sumac, and other dyes of natural origin, derived in no sense from coal tar but of vegetable derivation, and that such natural dyes may only be imported upon license.

It has further been held that the following drugs and medicinal preparations which are not of coal-tar origin and are of wide and necessary use as medicines, disinfectants, antiseptics, and anaesthetics, are embargoed; formaldehyde, chloroform, ether, glycerophosphoric acid, chlorohydrate, idoform, ethochloride, heroin, cocaine, morphine, and urea.

The Treasury has also held under this statute that the following acids which have no relation to coal tar and are of wide use in the arts and industries of the country are embargoed: Formic acid, lactic acid, oxalic acid, pyrogalic acid, acetic acid, valerianic acid, and all of the salts of said acids, as well as acetic anhydride, acetone, acetone oil, carbon tetrachloride, turpin hydrate, dionin, cellulose esters, amyl acetate, amyl nitrite, ethyl acetate, ethyl chloride, butyl alcohol, peronin, and calcium cacodylate, none of which, as indicated above, are of coal-tar derivation or origin.

There is no reason why a dye embargo as such should be extended either by specification or construction to exclude the importation of essential drugs, medicines, and disinfectants which have no relation to the dye industry, although they may be among the pharmaceutical derivatives of coal tar. Moreover, coal-tar derivatives are but a minor factor in the making of these drugs and medicinal preparations. But the greed of the embargoist knows no limit. He is intent upon extending the embargo into every possible corner of the whole chemical field. As a result, we find that the law is construed to embargo the importation of salvarsan, which is the only specific for the cure of syphilis; of novocain, which is the most important local anesthetic, and is generally used by dentists and surgeons for local and minor operations; of aspirin, a common remedy for colds, grippe, influenza, and other similar distempers; of veronal, which is a sedative drug of wide use; of acetanilid, which is used in the cure of headaches and colds; of salol, an effective urinary antiseptic; of sodium benzoate, which is a widely used preservative of food; of beta naphthol, cresol, and carbolic acid, all important disinfectants of wide general use; and of naphthalene, which is widely used to exclude moths and insects from clothing in wardrobes, and is the sole constituent of common moth balls.

The construction of the existing embargo, as excluding salvarsan from importation, is particularly reprehensible and unjustifiable. It ought to require no argument to convince Senators that the medical practitioner who has occasion to use this drug ought to be permitted to command salvarsan of any origin or manufacture which either he or his patient demands. After the outbreak of the World War, but before the United States entered the war, our Government made frantic efforts to arrange for the importation of salvarsan from Germany, and the State Department was able to arrange for several shipments of salvarsan, which, by agreement, were passed through the lines of the British blockade. It is true that salvarsan is now being manufactured in the United States, but it is also true that no person who has any right or cause to ask for an embargo on salvarsan has appeared before any committee of Congress and asked that salvarsan be embargoed.

Indeed, the largest manufacturer of salvarsan in this country does not ask an embargo, but is opposed to an embargo on the importation of this drug. This manufacturer has even applied to the Treasury for a license to import a limited number of ampules of salvarsan to supply the specific requirements of some of his customers who want the German product and are willing to pay any price for what they want. But the Treasury, or rather the chief of the dye and chemical control section, has refused all applications for licenses to bring in salvarsan, and as a consequence not a single ampule of this important drug can be lawfully imported into the United States. And this is the condition we are asked to perpetuate in this ill-advised and ill-considered legislation.

The dye and chemical control section, in applying this law, has also embargoed the importation of lampblack, which is used in the manufacture of paints, and creosote oil, which is used for preserving fence posts, railroad ties, telephone poles, and any wood structures which come in contact with the ground or water.

The dye and chemical control section has also held that the law embargoes the importation of artists' water colors and artists' crayons as being "mixtures," because they contain a small quantity of coal-tar colors.

The dye and chemical control section has specifically held, in section 7 of Treasury Decision 38799, July 1, 1921, that—

When a product has sufficient coal-tar products mixed or combined with it to materially change its identity or character, it shall be considered a "mixture" or "compound of such coal-tar product" within the meaning of the act.

There would seem to be no limit to the extension of the emergency embargo by bringing within its purview articles consisting wholly or in part of coal-tar products or which may be deemed to be mixtures of compounds of coal-tar products. It has also been held that—products obtained by fermentation, if such fermentation is carried on under controlled conditions, are considered to be synthetic organic chemicals.

It has also been held that—if the substance is subject to destructive distillation, the products of such destructive distillation are considered to be synthetic organic chemicals or drugs.

Thus the dye and chemical control section has embargoed the importation of butyl and amyl alcohol and, by the same token, methyl or wood alcohol, and ethyl or grain alcohol may be embargoed. There are no facts which would invoke any other rule as to grain alcohol and wood alcohol than the rule which is applied to amyl alcohol and butyl alcohol. Moreover, if artists' crayons may be embargoed because they are merely colored with coal-tar dyes, woolen goods and cotton goods and silk goods, paper, upholstery, carpets, and any dyed products whatsoever may likewise be embargoed because they are colored with coal-tar dyes.

The terms "synthetic organic chemicals" are not defined in the literature of chemical technology, and these terms are not defined by any trade practice or use. It was futile and fatuous to write such words into a statute and then permit some bureaucrat to exercise his ingenuity and imagination without limit as to the extent and scope of these terms. There could not be a more fertile field for controversy and litigation.

When we consider that carbon is a chemical that is characteristic of every substance in the organic world, of every substance of either vegetable or animal origin, of every product of a living organism, of every structure known to the plant and the animal kingdom, and that any alteration by fermentation, or by any chemical process whatsoever, may be deemed to be synthetic, we see that there is no limitation which these embargo propagandists will recognize or that they need recognize in the legal application of the makeshift embargo provided in the emergency tariff act and which it is the persistent endeavor of these propagandists to have perpetuated in the provisions of the pending bill.

I have already adverted to the fact that the embargo provided in the pending bill, as it was reported by the House committee and as it was voted out of the bill by the House, was restricted to the articles specified in paragraphs 25 and 26. But this embargo, which has been brought in by amendment to the bill by the Finance Committee, not only covers the dyes and intermediates specified in paragraphs 25 and 26 of the chemical schedule but covers, or may be made to cover, acetic acid, acetic hydrate, chloroacetic acid, lactic acid, formic acid, gallic acid, oxalic acid, pyrogalic acid in paragraph 1; and acetaldehyde, aldol, acetaldol, aldehyde ammonia, butyraldehyde, crotonaldehyde, paracetaldehyde, ethylene chlorohydrin, ethylene dichloride, ethylene glycol, ethylene oxide, glycol monoacetate, propylene chlorohydrin, propylene glycol of paragraph 2; and acetone, acetone oil, and ethyl methyl ketone of paragraph 3; and amyl alcohol, butyl alcohol, propyl alcohol, methyl alcohol, and ethyl alcohol of paragraph 4; and all the chemical elements, salts, and compounds, combinations and mixtures of any of the foregoing as provided in paragraph 5; and caffeine and compounds of caffeine in paragraph 14; and some of the mercurial preparations of paragraph 16; and chloroform tetrachloroethane, and trichloroethylene of paragraph 17; and some of the chemicals, drugs, and medicines imported in capsules, pills, tablets, lozenges, troches, ampules, jubes as provided in paragraph 21; and some of the chemical elements, compounds, preparations, mixtures, salts, distilled and essential oils, and so forth, included in paragraph 22; and chloralhydrate, turpin hydrate, thymol, uren, glycerophosphoric acid, and salts and compounds of glycerophosphoric acid of paragraph 24; and cellulose esters of paragraph 28; and diethyl sulfate, dimethyl sulfate, ethyl acetate, ethyl chloride, ethyl ether of paragraph 35; and extracts of chestnut, cutch, chlorophyl, divi-divi, fustic, hemlock, logwood, mangrove, myrobian, oak, Persian berry, quebracho, and sumac of paragraph 36; and synthetic fruit flavors, esters, oils, and essences of paragraph 37; and formaldehyde, paraformaldehyde, and hexamethylenetetramene of paragraph 38; and ink and ink powders of paragraph 41; and camphor of paragraph 48; and morphine, morphine sulfate, opium alkaloid salts and esters, cocaine, ecgonine of paragraph 55; and heliotropin, ionone, rhodinol, safrol, terpinol, vanillin, and other synthetic odoriferous or aromatic chemicals, or mixtures or combinations of the same, of paragraph 61; and paints, colors, and pigments of paragraph 62; and lampblack of paragraph 68; and sodium nitrite of paragraph 78; and hydrosulfite and sulfo-oxylate compounds, combinations, and mixtures of paragraph 79. And this formidable list of chemicals taken from almost every branch of the chemical schedule is to be brought by this legislation within the provisions of the supposed embargo on foreign dyes. There are a number of articles in this list, and which are embargoed by the provisions of the existing law, which are produced by only one company in this country, the effect of the embargo being to give them a practical monopoly of the trade in this article in the United States. Guaiacol carbonate is only manufactured by the Du Pont Co.

Acetphenetidin is a drug which is only manufactured in the United States by the Monsanto Chemical Co. The price of this drug in the United States in August, 1914, at the outbreak of the European war, was 80 cents per pound. In May, 1921, when the emergency tariff act became effective, the Monsanto Chemical Co., to which the embargo gave a monopoly on this article, raised the price promptly to $1.65 per pound, and have since raised the price to $1.85 per pound, having no competition whatever in the American market.

Tariff duties on drugs and medicines are vicious enough, but embargoes on drugs and medicines by which the sick and afflicted and the hospitals and the physicians and surgeons are denied the liberty to purchase the drugs and medicines which the world market affords, according to their own prescriptions and necessities, are without warrant in reason or morals and without justification in sound policy and from any view of the welfare of the country or the people of the country.

No nation, either in contemporary or historical times, has ever laid an embargo upon the importation of drugs or medicines. This is the very extremity of special and private legislation and has no part in a law enacted to raise revenue, protect industry, or regulate commerce.

Mr. President, I have here two lists containing the names of drugs and medicines which I hastily copied from the United States Dispensatory, twentieth edition, and the National Formulary IV, part 3, section 11, aggregating approximately 1,600 articles. All of these are to be placed under an embargo, notwithstanding the fact that they are indispensable to the health, indeed the lives, of the people. The sick, rich and poor alike, are to be placed at the mercy of these great corporations who have exploited the people and who propose to continue their oppressive and profiteering course. I ask that these lists may be inserted in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the permission asked by the Senator from Utah to insert in the RECORD the matter referred to will be granted. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, as I understand, the proposition of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] is that we can not adequately protect the 8 per cent of dyestuffs which are covered by the general classification of vat dyes unless we embargo them and at the same time embargo all of these articles which the Senator from Utah has mentioned?

Mr. KING. Exactly.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is proposed to embargo these dyes that we were making before the war in quantity sufficient to supply the American demand?

Mr. KING. The proposition is to embargo all dyes, notwithstanding Germany can not compete with domestic manufacturers in at least 92 per cent of this product.

Let me show to the Senator what the effect of this embargo is. I have prepared a table comparing the wholesale American selling price of 22 dyes of domestic manufacture, representing 63 per cent of the domestic dyes produced in the United States during 1921, with the wholesale American selling prices of the same dyes of German manufacture, and the prices are those of the past few days, based on the German home market values and the rate of duty in the pending bill of 60 per cent ad valorem and 7 cents a pound specific.

Dyes are identified by reference to what is known as Schultz's tables. By reference to these tables, having the number the dye bears, the character, nature, coloring effects, and virtue of the dye may be determined. I call attention to a dye known as benzo purpurine 4B, which will be found in Schultz's tables. There were produced in the United States in 1921, of this particular kind or grade of dye, 152,626 pounds. These figures are taken from the census of coal-tar dyes and chemicals prepared by the Tariff Commission. The German home market value of this particular dye, with the mark at its present low value was 267 marks per kilo. A kilo, as Senators know, is 2.2 pounds.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Does the Senator know what it cost to manufacture that dye in the United States?

Mr. KING. I know what the German home market price is; that is the price at which it was sold by the German cartel to German textile manufacturers for domestic consumption. The Senator is aware of the fact that the German dye producers have been supplying German textile mills dyes at as low a price as it was possible to produce and sell them, for the purpose of aiding the German textile manufacturers to produce and supply as much of the home market as possible and to enter the foreign markets.

This means that the German textile plants obtain their dyes at a lower price than that charged to foreign producers. This particular dye was sold to the German textile trade at 34½ cents per pound, gold. Before the war this same dye was supplied to the German consumers at 16 cents per pound. As stated, the German consumer is now compelled to pay 34½ cents in gold per pound. The prices of German dye products are relatively higher than the prices of other German products because of the difficulty experienced by Germany in obtaining the raw materials required for the production of dyes. If to this gold price is added 60 per cent ad valorem, the tariff rate carried in this bill, and 3 cents per pound for freight, insurance, and so forth, which have for years been the usual charges, and 20 to 25 per cent as profit for the manufacturer and the broker who buys and the wholesaler who supplies the retailer—and this figure is less than that charged by many, as in some instances the charges have been as high as 50 per cent—that would bring the price to 85½ cents per pound, gold, in the United States. The American manufacturer is now selling this particular dye for 80½ cents. It is apparent, therefore, that if the Americans could purchase German dyes as cheaply as the textile interests of Germany, this dye could not be sold in the United States for less than 85½ cents per pound, gold. Under a tariff of 60 per cent ad valorem and 7 cents per pound specific, as provided in this bill, it seems clear that an embargo has already been laid upon dyes.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to ask the Senator if he is not familiar with the contention made over and over again that the German dye manufacturers will sell in this country at a loss in order that they may undermine the American manufacturer?

Mr. KING. I have heard the contention made a hundred times that American manufacturers are selling at a loss in foreign countries for the purpose of undermining or destroying their competitors, and I have no doubt they have done so. We have sold many of our products in South America, as well as in Europe, as there is evidence before committees to prove, at a loss for the purpose of destroying competition.

Mr. STERLING. I asked the Senator whether he had not heard the contention that the German dye manufacturers do that? Does the Senator from Utah believe that they would?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, you can hear anything from an interested party. You can hear anything from men who come here to serve selfish and greedy interests and who appear before committees of Congress. If you ask any member of the Finance Committee who has heard the testimony, he will tell you that manufacturers and others seeking high tariffs have demanded rates and have insisted that they would perish if they did not get them, when the committee know that their statements were false.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah further yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. KING. I do.

Mr. STERLING. I think the Senator's statement as to competition among our own manufacturers demonstrates exactly what Germany might do if she had the chance, if there was no embargo; that is, she would undersell, and sell at a loss, because of this great market which she wants.

Mr. KING. I think, then, that the argument of the Senator from South Dakota stamps him as being the champion embargoist of the world. To be consistent, he must put an embargo upon everything, for fear that some country or some industry in some country is going to undersell us, even if it has to sell at a loss.

The Senator asks me if I believe that Germany will do that. I do not know. I believe that some Americans will sell at a loss to drive their foreign competitors out of foreign markets. I believe that some manufacturers of automobiles in the United States are going to sell at a loss in Europe until they close a number of European establishments engaged in the manufacture of automobiles.

Mr. STERLING. No doubt, Mr. President, in various businesses and industries, and among merchants, there are sales at a loss in the face of sharp competition.

Mr. KING. But this bill furnishes all the safeguards that could possibly be devised by the most greedy and selfish monopolist against any possible consummation of the execution of the supposititious plan mentioned by the Senator. The President is given power to increase the rates 50 per cent above those found in the bill. Moreover, drastic provisions appear to prevent dumping of foreign products and to prevent unfair competition at the hands of foreign producers. This bill provides reprisals and thunderbolts that may be employed against any of the evils or impending dangers visualized by the Senator.

But I invite attention to the fact that Germany is in no position to carry out any such plan. She is, as everybody knows, on the verge of bankruptcy, indeed, she is now bankrupt. To me it seems absurd to contend that this powerful Nation, with its superior resources, with its unparalleled financial power, with its economic and industrial advantages, can be beaten down, or its industries jeopardized by the impoverished nations of Europe.

I have heretofore called attention to the fact that in 1921 our exports of chemical products and commodities to Germany exceeded $94,000,000, and that our imports from Germany covering all chemicals, dyes, medicines, drugs, and so forth, were but $27,000,000. There is no doubt but what in foreign trade, as well as in domestic trade, efforts had been made at various times, by strong combinations, to injure competitors or to expand the domestic and foreign market, either by selling on a very narrow margin, or possibly for a limited time selling some commodities at a loss. But I do not think the United States presents any better record with respect to foreign competition of this character than that of Germany.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will say to the Senator, in response to a statement made by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], that before the war, and early in the beginning of the war, we heard a great deal about Germany's underselling for the purpose of destroying any attempt to build up the dye industry in other countries, in order that she might obtain what was then said to be a world monopoly. We were told that they had been able to establish this monopoly because of the cooperation of the Government with the industry; that it was a part of the military machine of Germany, and the Government had subsidized it; that the Government cooperated and aided in every possible way that a government can aid an industry where conditions existed similar to those which we know existed in Germany anterior to the war. It was said that this industry had become so powerful in Germany, backed and supported by the Government of Germany, that it was able to lose large sums of money in order to prevent the establishment of a competing industry in other countries.

Does the Senator think that in the present condition of Germany, with the hard blows that this industry has received as a result of the things that have happened during the last five or six years in Germany and elsewhere, the German dye industry is in any condition now, or that any industry in Germany is in any condition now, to lose money for the purpose of destroying a competing industry in a foreign country? Does the Senator think that the German Government now is in any condition to aid that industry to accomplish that purpose, as it was at the time we first heard these charges of German invasion and German domination and world trust in this industry?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the able Senator from North Carolina has asked me three questions. I answer each of them negatively. I do not want to be dogmatic, but in my opinion Germany is not in a situation to compete with the United States in dyes and in many other products, and the German Government is not in a position to subsidize or to aid by contributions from an exhausted and bankrupt treasury any of her industries. Already we know that the subsidies which were granted last year, and have been granted during and since the war, amounting to hundreds of millions, indeed billions of marks, to the railroads have been withdrawn. Subsidies granted to the municipalities have also been withdrawn, and there is a financial crisis as well as an industrial crisis in Germany to-day.

Mr. SIMMONS. And the industry is no longer subsidiary to a military establishment.

Mr. KING. Certainly not. They are developing there, under the Ebert government, what we believe to be and hope will be a democratic government; and the close connection between the monarchistic and military government which existed before the war and the people and the industries of the people will not persist under the present Government. It seems to me that the news which we get every day of conditions in Germany is a complete refutation of the contention made by so many of our friends, both on the other side of the Chamber and some on this side, that Germany is going to be a powerful competitor of the United States in the markets of the world.

Apropos of the questions just submitted by the Senator, I ask leave to place in the RECORD without reading an article from the Frankfurter Zeitung, a translation of which appears in the Canadian Chemical Journal, and also an article appearing in the magazine called Reconstruction, entitled "The Position of German Industrial Protection." With respect to the latter article, the editors state that they requested a number of prominent personages of German economic life to answer some questions with regard to the above subject, and they state that following are the replies so far received. The date of this article is May 15 of this year. I ask leave that both of these articles may be inserted in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator will be granted.

The article is as follows:

SURRENDER OF GERMAN COAL.

The Frankfurter Zeitung, a German newspaper, has the following to say in a recent issue regarding Germany's surrender of her coal areas:

"Germany's pit coal output on the 1st December, 1915, totaled 146,867,563 tons, but she is now to lose her coal fields in Upper Silesia, while the Saar and Aix-la-Chapelle regions will remain outside her sphere of control. On the 1st December, 1915, the production in Upper Silesia was 38,106,787 tons, in the Saar region 10,345,417 tons, and in the Aix-la-Chapelle coal field 2,251,260, or a total of 50,703,464 tons, i. e., 34.4 per cent of the total German output. She is therefore left with a production of 96,164,099, but even this figure requires important modifications. The conditions of production have greatly changed since 1915. The average daily dispatch of trucks in Rhenish Westphalia in peace time (1913) was 32,000; in February, 1919, after an improvement in conditions, it was 16,000.

Germany's remaining coal output may therefore, reasonably be placed at not more than 50,000,000 tons. Of this 50,000,000 she is for a period of 10 years to be compelled to deliver 21.6 million tons to France, 6 million to Italy, 8 million to Belgium, 1.5 million to Luxemburg, or a total of 37.1 million, leaving for her own necessities 22.9 million tons of her own coal. The total export in 1911 was 31,145,076 tons out of a total output of 158,777,500 tons. Thus with an output only one-third as large, she is to export 20 per cent more. This does not complete the chapter of her difficulties, for 74 per cent of her pit coal production is to be delivered at prices fixed exclusively by the victors. Three-fourths of her coal output instead of helping to rescue her from her economic distress will thus be excluded from contributing to her profits. In the chemical industry, too, which was her second great source of hope, conditions are similar.

[Article from the Reconstruction.]

The position in the German chemical industry is at present that although the number of orders on hand is still far below those of 1913–14, the quantities of mostly inferior coal at its disposal only just satisfy the requirements of some branches (nitrogen), while for other branches (soda) they are altogether inadequate. Stocks are nowhere to be found.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I now return to the table to which I referred a few moments ago. I called attention to one dye and submitted the comparative figures between American and German prices to illustrate the effect of the tariff rates of 60 per cent ad valorem and 7 cents per pound, as they are written into this bill.

Let me call attention to another dye known as orange II. In 1921 the American dye manufacturers produced 922,326 pounds. The pre-war price of this dye was 13½ cents in the United States. In Germany the present price to the consumer—that is, the German manufacturer of textiles—is 26½ cents per pound gold.

With respect to the relative cost of the production of dyes in the United States and Germany to-day, it is apparent that with a 60 per cent ad valorem duty and a 7 cents per pound specific duty, Germany would be unable to manufacture and sell dyes in the American market in competition with our domestic manufacturers.

Another important dye is agalma black 10B. During 1921 there were produced in the United States 1,426,194 pounds of this dye. In Germany this dye is now sold to the German textile interests for 51 cents gold per pound. Under the tariff rates fixed in this bill of 60 per cent ad valorem and 7 cents per pound and allowing the usual amount for transportation, insurance, brokers' charges, and so forth, it would cost $1.13 per pound to deliver this side in the United States. It is now sold by the dye manufacturers in the United States for 80 cents per pound. German importers would lose 33 cents a pound if they brought this article for sale in the United States.

Mr. President, without reading this table I ask that it be inserted as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Following is the table:

In order for importers to bring dyes from Germany (without profit or regard for selling expenses) he must buy these dyes in Germany at 40 cents per pound (5 cents below present German home market value). Then the import cost of dyes would equal American selling prices of same dyes of domestic manufacture.

Mr. KING. I ask that the following table be inserted in the RECORD without reading. It contains a comparison of the wholesale American selling prices of 22 dyes of domestic manufacture, representing 63 per cent of the domestic dye manufacture during 1921, with wholesale American selling prices of the same dyes of German manufacture. The rates are based on German export prices and also upon the tariff rates of 60 per cent ad valorem and 7 cents per pound found in this bill. Computation has been made as of June 1, this year, and the mark figured at one-third of a cent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the table will be printed in the RECORD.

The table is as follows:

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have gone far afield from the discussion of the Dyes Institute and Mr. Poucher, in which I was engaged some time ago, and their efforts to procure an embargo. I now return to that branch of my remarks. The American Dyes Institute has a special legislative committee, of which Mr. Morris R. Poucher, of the Du Pont corporation, is the chairman. The embargo scheme did not originate with Congress, but with Mr. du Pont and Mr. Poucher and others interested in aiding a dye monopoly, and with Mr. Choate and other attorneys who have received enormous fees from the proponents of the scheme.

It was this committee which arranged for the introduction of the first embargo bill in Congress. At the meeting of the institute held in New York on June 6, 1919, Mr. Poucher made a special report upon the legislative situation in Washington, which, without reading, I ask may be placed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request will be granted.

Mr. KING. The following is from the minutes of the institute:

The chairman then called upon Mr. M. R. Poucher to explain to the members the situation at Washington in connection with the proposed licensing bill. This Mr. Poucher did, his statement being practically the same as that which he had made to the executive committee, and which was to the effect that he had understood that a licensing bill was prepared to be introduced in Congress in a few days, and that he had been informed that it was the intention of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives to hold a hearing on that bill probably in the week beginning June 23.

Mr. Poucher announced that a special committee had been appointed by the executive committee consisting of Messrs. Wigglesworth, Jeffcott, and himself as chairman, to represent the institute at Washington and to do everything within its power to further the interests of the dye manufacturers of this country.

At the request of the chairman, the Secretary told about the agent of the War Trade Board, a Mr. Ralph B. Miller, who had been appointed to the advisory board created by the War Trade Board for the purpose of obtaining information concerning the dye industry, colors manufactured, intermediates made in this country, and such other information as would be necessary to guide the advisory board in reaching conclusions on any questions which might be referred to it by the War Trade Board concerning applications for licenses for the importation of dyes, chemicals, etc., pertaining to the dye industry.

Mr. Poucher amplified a bit upon the work of the advisory committee, knowledge of which was already possessed by the members through a statement issued by the War Trade Board itself, copy of which had been sent to all members as well as published in the press.

The desire of the War Trade Board in its licensing plan was, he said, to issue licenses only to those desiring to import those dyes into the United States which were not made in this country, or were not made in sufficient quantities to meet requirements, or where there was no apparent effort being made to manufacture those dyes in the near future. It would, however, he thought, be the position of the advisory committee of the War Trade Board and the board itself that if legitimate preparations were being made to produce certain colors, and if it were apparent that those colors could be produced in marketable quantities within the near future, say within a few months, then that fact would be taken into consideration in the issuing of licenses which might be applied for.

Mr. KING. The record of the legislative expenditures of the American Dyes Institute shows the payment of $50,000 to Joseph H. Choate, jr., and J. Harry Covington, Esq., as legislative fees for services in connection with this embargo legislation. These payments were made about two years ago. How much has been paid since I do not know. They are euphoneously called payments for "legislative services," which is merely a camouflage for what ought to be called plain lobbying and legislative embracery. This matter was before the Finance Committee on August 6, 1921, and Mr. Choate was interrogated as to the services he and Mr. Covington had rendered before these inordinate fees were paid. Without taking the time to read the testimony, I ask that excerpts may be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request will be granted if there is no objection.

The excerpts are as follows:

Senator SMOOT. Included in this here is your compensation of $25,000; is that correct?

Mr. CHOATE. What do you mean by "legislative campaign"?

Senator MOSES. Is that all that you did for them, Mr. Choate?

Mr. CHOATE. Was that all that I did for them?

Senator MOSES. Yes.

Mr. CHOATE. That was not all that I did for them. I made a trip to France for them.

Senator MOSES. No. I mean during that period in connection with the legislative campaign.

Mr. CHOATE. I came down here during all of the hearings, during many weeks when I was kept waiting for hearings that strung along on other matters after our matter had been called. I made innumerable memoranda for them in regard to every possible suggestion that was made for changes in various bills. You will recall three bills have been reported by three committees, and that there had, up to that time, been two bills reported by two committees, each of which had been changed in—I was going to say—numberless particulars at various times, any one of which might have been important.

* * * * * * * *

Senator LA FOLLETTE. What time did you visit Paris for the foundation?

Mr. CHOATE. Not for the foundation, but for the Dyes Institute. The foundation had nothing whatever to do with it. I sailed on the 20th of October, 1920, and I got back here, I think, on the 23d of December, 1920.

Senator LA FOLLETTE. Were you over there on business for the Alien Custodian?

Mr. CHOATE. By no means. This was 1920; I was there purely for the American Dyes Institute and nobody else.

Senator MOSES. How many weeks were you absent?

Mr. CHOATE. I sailed October 20 and I came back on December 23, 1920.

Senator MOSES. Six weeks?

Mr. CHOATE. No; nine weeks.

Senator MOSES. Your traveling expenses were $1,505.01?

Mr. CHOATE. I think that is an error; I think they were $1,400 and something. I may state that the amount of the staterooms there and back was $700 and more.

Senator MOSES. I note a payment on account of Paris trip, $3,499.

Mr. CHOATE. Yes; there was an agreed fee there of $25,000, which came about in this way—I think I should state it: The legislative committee of the Dyes Institute came to me in October, 1920, and stated to me that they were very much troubled over the effect which was apparently being produced upon the German dye industry by the operations of the Reparations Commission under the treaty. The difficulty was this: Under annex 5 of Article VI of the treaty the Allies were entitled to 25 per cent of the daily production, but the Reparation Commission was authorized to require the delivery, in case in their opinion the actual daily production was less than normal, of 25 per cent of the normal production.

* * * * * * *

Accordingly, I was asked to go over there and find out what they were doing, see if I could persuade the Reparation Commission to enforce normal production so as to insure the supplies of those essential dyes and prevent the full like forcing which would follow their lack.

Mr. KING. The records show that in the course of a little more than a year, Mr. Choate received from the American Dyes Institute fees in the sum of $50,000 and that he has received from the Chemical Foundation fees in the sum of $20,000 which, together with expense moneys which had been allowed him, have made the payments of these two eleemosynary institutions for Mr. Choate's services, amount to $75,000. Mr. Covington's fee was $25,000. His principal service was the drafting of the embargo bill. These attorneys of the dye combination have received $100,000 for advising Congress and the Reparation Commission as to what should be their policy with respect to the dye industry.

When Mr. Choate's mission as minister plenipotentiary and ambassador extraordinary from the American Dyes Institute to the Reparations Commission is viewed in its proper light it is disclosed to be a bold attempt to assume and arrogate to the dye combination governmental and diplomatic functions in dealing with foreign Governments. For the Reparations Commission is an agency of the allied powers, and no person except one with proper diplomatic credentials would have any right to attempt to deal with the commission on a matter involving the enforcement or the amendment of the treaty of Versailles. Yet the American dye combine, not satisfied with the control of the dye business in the United States, reached out to control the product of the German dye plants, and had the affrontery to propose to the Reparations Commission to use its powers under the treaty to force and compel the German dye plants to deliver to the Reparations Commission the kind of dyes the American dye combine desired to have delivered and to permit the Textile Alliance or the dyes advisory committee of the Textile Alliance, which is a mere creature and tool of the American Dyes Institute, to import these dyes through reparation channels and thus obtain a complete monopoly on the importation of German dyes into the United States. The Germans are compelled under the treaty of Versailles to deliver to the Reparations Commission, or upon their requisition, up to one-fourth of the current production of each kind of dye produced.

That ought to be considered in determining Germany's situation in dealing with the dye industry of the world. She is compelled to surrender one-fourth of her production to the Allies, practically at cost. Senators know that an export tax has to be paid, I think, of 26 per cent, on products which leave Germany.

This option on the part of the commission gives the commission the power to require the German plants to deliver one-fourth of the quantity of each dye which they produce. The deliveries are to be made in kind, and the new scheme was to have the Reparations Commission use pressure upon the Germans to compel them in place of one-fourth of the quantity of each dye produced to deliver one-fourth of the total values of the dyes produced upon such specifications as to the kind of dyes to be delivered as the commission might prescribed from time to time.

This required an amendment of the protocol covering dyes in the treaty. These dye men seem to assume that they would have the right to sign, execute, and ratify such an amendment to the treaty of Versailles on the part of the Government of the United States. The Germans were forced to some modification of the protocol calling for the delivery of dyestuffs, but as our Government has not signed such amendment, the Germans have properly refused to deliver dyes to the Reparation Coinmission for the Textile Alliance under the new arrangement, and the scheme seems to become aborted.

I have referred to the fact that the Textile Alliance has committed all questions relating to the importation of dyes to a special committee, and that this committee is dominated by the same dye manufacturers who dominate the American Dyes Institute. The members of this committee who control the purchase and importation of reparation dyes to this country are Morris R. Poucher, of the Du Pont Co.; Robert T. Baldwin, of the Allied Dye & Chemical Co.; August Merz, of Heller & Merz; and Charles H. Herty, president of the Synthetic-Organic Chemical Manufacturers' Association. These four men who dominate the Textile Alliance and, in fact, have been using the Textile Alliance or the name of the Textile Alliance to engage in the traffic in reparation dyes are also the dominating members of the executive committee of the American Dyes Institute. These are the men who have assumed the sovereign prerogative of the Government, of carrying on diplomatic relations with the Reparation Commission, both in the name of the American Dyes Institute and of the Textile Alliance. And to this day the Textile Alliance, or this committee of dye makers which dominate its present activity, are carrying on the pose and camouflage that they are the official agency of the Government of the United States for the purchase, importation, and sale of reparation dyes. Mr. Roland W. Boyden, the so-called unofficial representative of the United States to the Reparation Commission, has been acting in concert with Mr. Edward S. Chapin, representative of the Textile Alliance or this committee of dye manufacturers which is masquerading under the name of the Textile Alliance, in dealing with the Reparation Commission and in keeping up the appearance that the Textile Alliance is an exclusive importation agency of the Government of the United States for the importation of reparation dyes.

My Boyden has, as I say, been acting in collusion with the representative of the Textile Alliance to keep up this pretense and has been unwilling to represent to the Reparation Commission the lack of authority of the Textile Alliance to act for the Government of the United States in this matter. And it must be said that the Reparation Commission has been so anxious to believe that it was in diplomatic correspondence with the State Department and with the Government of the United States that it has only been too willing to blind itself to the real status of the Textile Alliance and to affect to believe that the Textile Alliance was an official agency of the Government of the United States, and that by dealing with the alliance the commission was in fact dealing with the United States and having official communication with the Government of the United States. It is about time that the Government should cut off the official head of the Textile Alliance and decisively do away with this pretense that it is an official agency of the Government of the United States to buy dyes from the Reparation Commission for sale in the American market.

It is now nearly four years since the armistice which closed the war, and yet we have to this day a Dye and Chemical Control Section in the Treasury which issues exclusive licenses to the Textile Alliance to import reparation dyes, and we have the further spectacle of the Government, by its lassitude and indifference, permitting a mere private corporation or a mere ring of dye manufacturers which are using the name of the Textile Alliance, to pretend that they have exclusive rights from the Government of the United States to buy and import reparation dyes and thus exercise monopolistic rights with respect to the importation of German dyes.

The Textile Alliance is holding on to these monopolistic rights not for the service of the textile trades of the country, but in the interests of a few individuals who draw large salaries from this dye committee and who desire to retain their lucrative positions and from the general desire of the dye committee to continue a very profitable business free from the obligations and taxes which the law imposes upon mercantile and business corporations.

There has been introduced into the Senate a resolution which is based upon the assumption that the United States is entitled to certain dyes and drugs under section 1 of Article II of the treaty between the United States and Germany proclaimed November 14, 1922, and it is reported that upon the assumption that this resolution will pass the Senate, the Reparation Commission will continue to deal with the Textile Alliance as an exclusive governmental agency to buy and import reparation dyes for sale in the American market. And so the dye combine intends to continue not only the control of the American production but also the control of importations through the dye committee which uses the name of the Textile Alliance for this purpose.

The Textile Alliance has always been willing to enter into a deal with the German cartel or trust called the Interessen Gemeinschaft, if only the alliance could have charge of the business of selling German dyes in this country. This affectation of horror at the terrible German dye trust on the part of the dye combine is just a pose and a pretense. The dye combine would enter into exclusive business relations with the German trust to-day if it could, and it would not hesitate to enter into a combine with any foreign trust to control the dye trade of the world, just as the Du Pont Co. entered into a contract with Levinstein's (Ltd.) of England to divide the dye trade of all the civilized countries between themselves, and to refrain from trading in the territory allocated to the other party to the conspiracy.

On July 1 I offered a resolution which deals with the machinations of the dye combine, using the name of the Textile Alliance to pose as an official agency of the Government of the United States in carrying on a traffic in reparation dyes; and as this resolution deals in a succinct way with the pretenses and propaganda carried on in the name of the Textile Alliance, I ask that it be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The resolution is as follows:

Senate Resolution 317.

Whereas the Textile Alliance (Inc.), a membership corporation organized in the State of New York, has carried on a propaganda to mislead Congress into the belief that the Government of the United States has valuable interests and rights in and to the dyestuffs and drugs which are currently received by the Reparation Commission from Germany on account of reparations due the allied European powers; and

Whereas the Government of the United States has no interest in said reparation dyestuffs and drugs, and no rights with respect to the proceeds of the sale of such dyestuffs and drugs, and has no credits against Germany for reparations or otherwise for the satisfaction of which said dyestuffs or drugs or any part thereof may be applied, and has no interest in the purchase of such dyes and drugs for sale in the American market; and

Whereas said Textile Alliance (Inc.) is a mere membership corporation, having no shares or capital stock, and is not legally authorized to engage in business of any kind, or to employ capital for profit or otherwise, and is exempt from the obligations to pay the taxes and charges imposed by law upon business and mercantile corporations; and

Whereas said Textile Alliance (Inc.), in violation of its charter and acting outside of its legal powers, has carried on a traffic in that part of the reparation dyes which the Reparation Commission has been willing to sell for export to the United States, by which ultra vires traffic said Textile Alliance (Inc.), although incorporated as a non-profit corporation, has realized up to January 1, 1922, profits in excess of $1,500,000, which profits are believed at this time to amount to nearly $2,000,000; and

Whereas said Textile Alliance (Inc.) has without authority assumed the status of an official agency of the United States Government to deal in said reparation dyes for sale in the American market; and

Whereas the State Department on or about December 14, 1921, definitely advised the Reparation Commission that the Textile Alliance (Inc.) had no official status, agency, or relation with or for the Government of the United States, with respect to reparation dyes or drugs or otherwise, and that the Government of the United States had no interest in the importation into the United States of reparation dyes or drugs, and that such reparation dyes and drugs as were for sale by the Reparation Commission might be procured for the American market through regular commercial channels, and that the Government of the United States was not concerned with the purchase or marketing of said dyes or drugs; and

Whereas the Textile Alliance (Inc.) has delegated all power with respect to the traffic in dyes and drugs to a so-called advisory committee which is controlled by the corporations engaged in the manufacture of dyes in the United States, which are merely using the name of the alliance to carry on said ultra vires traffic in dyes and drugs and to exercise monopolistic control of the importation of dyes and drugs into the United States; and

Whereas said Textile Alliance (Inc.) continues to pretend to be an official and exclusive agency of the United States Government for the purchase and importation of reparation dyes; and

Whereas it is reported that Mr. Roland W. Boyden, the so-called unofficial representative of the United States accredited to the Reparation Commission, is cooperating with representatives of the Textile Alliance (Inc.) to continue the assumption that the Textile Alliance (Inc.) has the exclusive right to purchase reparation dyes and drugs for importation into the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the State Department should forthwith annul and cancel any authority on the part of any so-called unofficial representative of the United States or other persons to deal with the Reparation Commission respecting the purchase and importation of reparation dyes into the United States, and further that the State Department should advise the Reparation Commission that the Government of the United States has no concern with the purchase of reparation dyes and drugs for importation into the United States, and specifically that neither the Textile Alliance (Inc.) nor Mr. Roland W. Boyden has any authority to negotiate with the Reparation Commission on behalf of the Government of the United States concerning the purchase and importation of reparation dyes for sale in the United States.

Mr. KING. The Textile Alliance is a membership corporation and was organized under the laws of the State of New York under date of February 24, 1919. The object of the alliance and the whole of the powers to be exercised by it under its constitution are contained in this article:

The protection of mill owners and operators from, and the prevention and reform of, abuses, unjust and unlawful exactions, deceptions and frauds in the manufacture and sale of mill supplies, and the prevention and prosecution of unlawful, illegal, and improper actions, misdemeanors, and crimes in connection therewith.

The Textile Alliance has no right under the law to engage in business of any kind. It has no shares of capital stock. It is a nonprofit, nontrading corporation. The main purposes of the organization, as set forth in the constitution from which I have just quoted, have to do with the eradication of certain abuses and evils to which the textile trades were then subjected. These objects, as I have been informed, have long since been accomplished, and the alliance itself is practically defunct except as the dye combination is using the name of the alliance to carry on this ultra vires traffic in reparation dyes.

I am not concerned with the activities of the alliance during the war. That matter is all in the past. The war has been over for nearly four years but the dye committee that is now using the alliance for its own private purposes is constantly referring to functions that the alliance performed during the war as an argument that these functions should be continued now that the war is over for nearly four years. The alliance itself, as I have stated, has become practically defunct and the use of the name of the alliance has been assumed by persons representing the dye manufacturers who have utterly no relation to the purposes and objects of the alliance as set forth in the articles of incorporation, and which are the limit of its legal powers.

The attorney for the Textile Alliance, who is employed by the dye advisory committee which is carrying on the only activity presently pursued in the name of the alliance, in an assumed air of innocence appeared before a committee of the Senate and said that he knew nothing about an embargo, and was not concerned about an embargo or a monopoly. He had no knowledge whatever upon such questions, but was only concerned with the protection of these valuable American rights under the treaty of Versailles. What a pretense this all is when we consider that Morris R. Poucher, dominating member of the dyes advisory committee of the Textile Alliance, is the chairman of the legislative or lobbying committee of the American Dyes Institute which arranged to bring in the embargo bill which is now in substance, at least, pending as a part of the tariff bill now before the Senate.

The embargo on dyes, providing as it does for the licensing and importation of dyes and the scheme for an exclusive right upon the part of the Textile Alliance to import the licensed dyes, are but parts of the same scheme and conspiracy for the private control of the dye trade in the markets of this country. Embargoes, licenses, and a monopoly of imports by the Textile Alliance are all schemes of the dye combination to control the domestic dye trade. And they are inseparably bound up with the conspiracy and the propaganda for this purpose.

If the Dyes Institute becomes defunct, if the Chemical Foundation goes into liquidation, if the Textile Alliance gets out of this ultra vires business of trafficking in reparation dyes, we will still have with us the Synthetic-Organic Chemical Manufacturers' Association, which is the presumptive residuary legatee of all the nefarious interests, activities, and functions of the Dyes Institute, the Chemical Foundation, and the dyes advisory committee of the Textile Alliance. The board of governors of this new association consists of the following persons:

Morris B. Poucher, controlled by the Du Pont Co.
C. H. Herty, controlled by the Du Pont Co.
R. C. Jeffcott, controlled by the Calco Chemical Co.
August Merz, controlled by Heller & Merz.
F. P. Summers, controlled by the National Chemical & Color Works.
S. W. Wilder, controlled by the Merrimac Chemical Co.
C. N. Turner, controlled by the Newport Chemical Works.
Herman Seydel, controlled by Seydel Mannfacturing Co.
P. Schlussner, controlled by Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co.
R. T. Bush, controlled by Antoine Chiris Co.
R. S. Burdick, controlled by Abbott Laboratory.

The secretary of the Synthetic-Organic Chemical Manufacturers' Association is Mr. H. E. Danner, who was the secretary of the open-price section of the American Dyes Institute.

At the first meeting of the board of governors of the Synthetic-Organic Chemical Manufacturers' Association, on October 29, 1921, a committee of three, consisting of D. P. Bush, Herman Seydel, and Charles H. Herty was appointed to confer with Joseph H. Choate, jr., and J. Harry Covington, attorneys for the dye combine, for the purpose of having prepared a code of by-laws for the Synthetic-Organic Chemical Manufacturers' Association.

The Synthetic-Organic Chemical Manufacturers' Association has taken over the work of embargo propaganda and has circularized Congress with pamphlets containing excerpts from testimony before the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary investigating dye monopoly and propaganda. These pamphlets undertake to state completely the arguments in favor of the dye propaganda. The points made are so childish and tenuous as to not require any effort at explanation or refutation. The main contention is that the different kinds of dyes are so numerous as to require a great number of special rates for their protection and that it is impossible to contrive the great number of rates required for this purpose. The answer to this contention is that all dyes imported into the United States are converted into the common denomination of dollars; that the high-priced dyes and the low-priced dyes, the dyes of high cost of production and the dyes of low cost of production, are all merged in the form of dollars, and the duty of 60 per cent ad valorem is applied uniformly to this valuation, so that every dye imported comes under a duty which is proportionate to its cost, under which arrangement the low-priced dyes will pay relatively low duty per pound and the high-priced dyes a proportionately high duty per pound. The ad valorem duty thus operates with uniformity and equality upon the cost of production of any and all dyes which may be imported and which may compete in the American market with domestic dyes. There is utterly no point in the contention that a multitude of duties must be separately provided for each of the multitude of dyes. The one duty of 60 per cent ad valorem covers the case completely and operates equally and rationally and protectively upon all dyes imported. And, I dare say, this will more than cover the differential between the regular prices of identical dyes abroad and in the home market. Of course, the specific duty of 7 cents per pound applies to all imported dyes.

The only other point for the embargo advanced by the Synthetic-Organic Chemical Manufacturers' Association is the claim advanced by Mr. Garvan that if the importation of dyes is permitted the Germans "will dump our markets full of their dyes and will spend $30,000,000 in destroying our domestic dye industry." This is the same false cry that enormous quantities of German dyes were being accumulated to "dump on the American market" which induced Congress to enact the embargo provisions of the emergency tariff act. It has been proven that this claim was merely a myth, and the foundations of Mr. Garvan's statements are equally mythical. His premise is fictitious, and his opinion and conclusions are equally fictitious. They are unworthy of the credence or consideration of the Senate.

The men who are clamoring for dye embargoes are not the men who established the dye industry in this country. They are the tyros, the newcomers, the adventurers, and the "get-rich-quick" artists who have supplanted the men who established and developed the business, and having gotten control of the leading plants at inflated prices they are reaching out to establish and maintain a monopoly in this country, and are really more concerned with embargoes and prohibitions than they are with the legitimate business of making and marketing dyes.

The fact that these dye interests are still clamoring for an embargo merely signifies that they are not satisfied with the demands which they made upon Congress in 1919, and which have been effectually granted, but that they are in fact insatiate, that their greed grows upon that which it feeds on, and that the more of embargoes they have the more of embargoes they want, and that the voracity they have developed craves embargoes and then more embargoes and more embargoes ad infinitum. How much of embargoes does it take to satisfy the avarice of these interests? They have been feeding and growing upon embargoes de facto and de jure for eight years, since the outbreak of the German war in 1914. The business has been so profitable that the men who worked and established the American dye industry have been induced by financiers who desire to exploit the industry to sell their plants at enormous prices and the industry, or at least that part of the industry which is clamoring for embargo, is now dominated by men whose primary purpose is not the making of dyes but the grabbing of dollars, and who have become so overgrown with profits that they shrink at the very thought of meeting any fair competition in the business. They appeal to Congress for protection, for protection of profits, for protection of their special privileges.

We had just as well put an end to these insatiate demands at this time because the embargo has already operated for a longer period of time than was contemplated by Congress and as long as the proponents of the embargo had either right or reason to expect it to operate.

It is time, I assert, when the trade in dyes and colors and textiles should be left free to men whom the law recognizes as traders, and who will obey the laws of trade and pay the taxes of trade for the support of the Government. It is time that we should take summary measures to cut away this last vestige of of bureaucratic control of business which hangs over as an aftermath of the war and permit the dye trade to adjust itself as a trade relieved, as are the other trades, from the blight and hindrance of bureaucratic direction and dominance.

I submit in all candor that it is time for the Senate to say to these concerns with such a plethora of money that they can spend a million dollars in chemical education and embargo propaganda, that we are not convinced that an embargo is necessary, or that an embargo is either prudent or politic from any consideration of the welfare of the country, and that we will not be hoodwinked or deceived even by the representations of men who have been paid an hundred thousand dollars to enlighten us, and who have rendered the dye combination legislative instruction and advice which the dye combine may regard as value received for the money it has paid out upon the assurance that this embargo legislation would be forthcoming.

This embargo legislation is not necessary for the development of the American industry. If new dyes be discovered or new processes be invented, our patent laws will afford ample protection and our patent conventions with foreign countries will give the American patentees not only a domestic monopoly but a world monopoly for their new discoveries.

For the last five years we have had a clear balance of dye exports over imports. In other words, in these years the American industry has enjoyed a wider market than the American market, so that the importation of a few foreign colors means nothing, as it has been greatly overbalanced by exports of dyes to foreign countries. Moreover, I submit that imports up to the amount of 10 per cent of the domestic consumption of any article are salutary and desirable from the standpoint of the economy of the country, for the purpose of stabilizing prices, coordinating our markets with the world market, and the maintaining of temperate and rational conditions in the trade. Without a reasonable quantity of imports the quality of our own productions will decline and prices in our own markets will be subject to inflation and disturbance. The tariff itself will cause the maintenance of American prices at such price levels above the world market as may be regarded as necessary for the protection of our industries. There is neither reason or need for imposing an embargo against the importation of wholesome and desirable articles of commerce.

There are those who affect to believe that the embargo is a great national policy, and somebody, entertaining these views, has apparently prevailed upon a majority of the majority members of the Finance Committee to bring in the amendment to the pending bill which in section 531 provides "that the dye and chemical control act of 1921, approved May 27, 1921, as amended, shall continue in force for one year after date of passage of this act." This scheme is a continuation of the bureaucratic control of business which grew out of the war. There are those who claim that this was one of the main factors which caused the change in the administration of the Government which was voted by the country in the 1920 elections. It may have been a contributing cause.

The country is weary of bueaucratic control of business. The country expects that the promises of the administration to get the Government out of business shall be kept. And what does this embargo policy mean in the final analysis? Or, rather, what has this policy meant? And, what is it in its actual application, as it exists to-day in regard to the importation of dyes? A true picture of the thing that some call a great national policy, or the will of Congress, shows that a so-called assistant chief of the Customs Division of the Treasury, who was formerly a bank clerk, having had no connection with, or knowledge of, the textile industry, or the production or marketing of dyes, is undertaking by himself to say to the woolen mills and the cotton and the silk mills and the knitting mills of the country what dyes they may or may not have to color the fabrics which they prepare for the American market. The great textile industry of this country has come to a sorry pass when one little man has the power to tell them what they may and may not use in the way of dyestuffs.

It is one of the absurdities of Bolshevism that the Government or the dictatorship of the proletariat is to dictate to the people what we may or may not eat, what we may or may not wear, what we may or may not do, thus destroying that liberty of the will which is the right of free men everywhere and by which we indulge our tastes as to what we want and what we will have, not only in the food we eat, but in the colors of our headwear and neckwear and underwear, of our shirts and coats and trousers and shoes, and of the dresses and hosiery and paraphernalia of the women of our country. Any power which assumes to arbitrarily determine what may or may not be produced in a country is an intolernble despotism.

There is nothing known to mankind that is as subtle and inexplicable as the tastes of men and women, particularly as manifested in the colors of clothing and in the flavors of the food and confections which the public demands. And there is no more difficult and intricate task than the business of catering to all these various and multifarious tastes and desires of the public. It is an intolerable despotism that the law or the Government, much less one little bureaucrat upon his stool in a Government office, should be invested with the legal power and should assume to say to those enterprises and businessmen who cater to the taste of the public what colors they may use in their clothes, what flavors they may have in their foods and confections, and what shall be the source of the medicines they may demand in case of sickness.

Since the bureaucratic control of imports was established during the war I am informed that the bureau of imports of the War Trade Board, which has now become the chief of the dye and chemical control section of the Treasury, has issued 216,372 separate licenses for the import of commodities into the United States; and although the war has been over since 1918, we find that this license system continues as to the importation of dyes and chemicals, and that in the three years since July 1, 1919, 29,889 applications for permission to import chemicals and dyes have been acted upon by the dye and chemical control section, and that since May 28, 1921, when the so-called Knox embargo amendment to the emergency tariff act was adopted, the applications to import chemicals and dyes which have been granted by the dye and chemical control section amount to 7,175 in number. And no information is at hand as to the number of applications which have been and are currently being made. These figures indicate, however, that applications granted amount to at least 7,000 a year, which indicates the great number of special arrangements which must be made by persons engaged in the textile, hat, paper, leather, printing, and other trades in order to get the necessary dyes and colors of their business. When it is considered that many of these applications call for special lots of select dyes in quantities of 5, 10, 20, 50, 75, and 100 pounds, the whole scheme is revealed as an intolerable nuisance. Of this there has been ample testimony produced before the committees of Congress, a proper consideration of which should constrain Congress to make an end to this iniquitous and exasperating scheme. Not only must the user of dyes file a formal application for the dye he desires to import, representing that the dye is not produced in this country, and then wait to have the question as to whether this dye or a substitute therefor is produced in the country passed upon by a bureaucrat who is himself without technical experience or qualifications and who is without the assistance of qualified technical and professional advice, but after a license is issued the same must be placed in the hands of an importer, who must place an order for the dye in Switzerland or Germany or England, and often months elapse before the required color comes to hand.

However, it should be stated that the entire quantity of dyes imported is very small. While the number of licenses granted seems considerable, many of them relate to but a very few pounds of dyes or a very small quantity of medicines or drugs.

It is a favorite practice of both the embargo propagandists and others in the want of sound reasons to support their propaganda, to tell us what is done in this country and that country abroad. One of the distinctions of our political history has been that we have always been in favor of an American policy for America. We have considered our own problem in the light of our best experience and judgment and sought to apply the remedy which the case calls for without regard to the practice or policy of other countries. At least this was the practice of the founders of the Government and their immediate successors. The most vicious things in the modern legislation of this country, and from which the country to-day is suffering, may be traced to the endeavor to imitate continental legislation or to apply continental legislation in this country. And the noxious brands of propaganda which are now infecting the country, vitiating public opinion and beclouding the minds of the people, have their origin in the fetid and unwholesome agitations of the European politics.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] earlier in my remarks brought my attention to the claim that other countries had an embargo.

The dye embargoist does glibly tell us that England has an embargo, that France has an embargo, that Italy has an embargo, and even that Japan has an embargo as affording conclusive reasons why we should have an embargo in the United States. This is their consummate argument or lack of argument. They offer neither reason nor facts drawn from American conditions and requirements, but merely say that Europe has an embargo and therefore we should have an embargo. But let us examine these so-called embargoes abroad and differentiate them from the embargo proposed in the pending bill.

In England there are no duties on the importation of dyestuffs—that is to say, dyes and dyestuffs where their import is permitted are free—and there is no form of protection by way of tariff duties afforded the British manufacturer of dyes. In order to contrast the British act with the provisions of the pending bill, I present to the Senate at this time the text of the British law:

CHAPTER 77.

An act to regulate the importation of dyestuffs (23d December, 1920).

Be it enacted by the King's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

1. (1) With a view to the safeguarding of the dye-making industry, the importation into the United Kingdom of the following goods—that is to say, all synthetic organic dyestuffs, colors and coloring matters, and all organic intermediate products used in the manufacture of any such dyestuffs, colors, or coloring matters shall be prohibited.

(2) Goods prohibited to be imported by virtue of this act shall be deemed to be included among the goods enumerated and described in the table of prohibitions and restrictions inward contained in section 42 of the customs consolidation act, 1876, and the provisions of that act and of any act amending or extending that act shall apply accordingly.

2. (1) The board of trade have power by license to authorize, either generally or in any particular case, the importation of any of the goods, or any class or description of the goods, prohibited to be imported by virtue of this act.

(2) A license granted under this section shall not be transferable.

(3) For the purpose of advising them with respect to the granting of licenses, the board shall constitute a committee consisting of five persons concerned in the trades in which goods of the class prohibited to be imported by this act are used, three persons concerned in the manufacture of such goods, and three other persons not directly concerned as aforesaid.

Such one of the three last-mentioned persons as the board shall appoint shall be chairman of the committee.

(4) If on an application for a license under this section the committee are satisfied that the goods to which this application relates are goods wholly produced or manufactured in some part of His Majesty's dominions, a license shall be granted in accordance with the application.

(5) An applicant for a license shall be entitled to object to any member or members of such committee dealing with his application on the ground that he is prejudiced, owing to the fact that such member or members is or are trade competitors, and if such objection is sustained by the committee the member or members so objected to shall withdraw from further consideration of the case and shall not have access to any information or documents concerning it.

(6) For the purpose of advising them with respect to the efficient and economical development of the dye-making industry, the board shall constitute a committee of persons concerned in the trades of dye maker or dye user and of such other persons not directly concerned in such trades as the board may determine.

(7) For the purpose of providing for the expenses incurred by the board in carrying this act into execution the board may charge in respect of a license a fee not exceeding £5.

3. Subject to compliance with such conditions as to security for the reexportation of the goods as the commissioners of customs and excise may impose, this act shall not apply to goods imported for the exportation after transit through the United Kingdom or by way of transshipment.

4. Anything authorized under this act to be done by the board of trade may be done by the president or a secretary or assistant secretary of the board or by any person authorized in that behalf by the president of the board.

5. (1) The provisions of this act shall continue in force for a period of 10 years from the commencement thereof and no longer.

(2) This act may be cited as the dyestuffs (import regulation) act, 1920.

(3) This act shall come into operation on the 15th day of January, 1921.

An examination of the text of the British act discloses that the prohibition of imports is restricted to "synthetic organic dyestuffs, colors, and coloring matters, and all organic intermediate products used in the manufacture of any such dyestuffs." In other words, the prohibition of imports does not extend to any chemicals, drugs, pharmaceuticals, or other materials of synthetic or organic derivation from coal tar or other origin, but applies only to dyestuffs, colors, and coloring matters of synthetic organic derivation.

The British act is distinctively and exclusively a prohibition on the importation of coal-tar dyestuffs. The prohibition, however, is subject to the power vested in the board of trade to license importation, but the board is required to license the importation of any article that is produced in the British dominions, and has discretion to grant licenses for the importation of dyes from other countries. Moreover, this discretion is not controlled by any statutory prescriptions. The board of trade has plenary and unqualified discretion in such matters. There is an advisory committee to consult with the board with relation to the issuance of licenses and the act requires that this committee shall consist of persons who are concerned in the trade of the dye maker and dye user and of other persons who are not concerned in such trades. But the powers of this committee are entirely advisory. The board is authorized to charge a fee not exceeding £5 for licenses to import dyes. Moreover, any applicant for a license may object to any member or members of the committee dealing with his application if such member or members is or are trade competitors, and if the objection is sustained by the committee such members must withdraw from consideration of the application and shall not have access to any information or documents concerning it.

The matter of licenses is not controlled by any inside ring in the trade, and no member of the committee is permitted to deal with his competitor's application. Moreover, the board of trade has power to permit the importation of dyestuffs without limit as to quantity or as to kinds, which thus permits the providing of adequate stocks of dyes to supply the current demands of the trade. And this is the way the law is administered for the benefit of the British textile trade, although London is only a day from the German dye markets in Hamburg and Frankfurt. But in the United States we are so dumb in yielding to the importunities of propagandists that we have a dye embargo here which leaves the Government no discretion to permit the importation of stocks of dyes to be held to supply the current demands of trade, although it actually takes weeks, if not months, to get dyes from Germany or Switzerland on small orders, and in the meantime valuable business is lost and the mills are put to the exasperation of delays and of dealing with persons who act arbitrarily, and seem to be more concerned with holding up the course of trade than with facilitating the commerce of the country.

There were peculiar reasons which impelled the British Parliament to pass the act to regulate the importation of dyestuffs on the 23d of December, 1920; reasons which I would like to further observe have no application to conditions in this country. The British Government is in the dye-making business. When the British Dyestuff Corporation (Ltd.) was formed in March, 1915, the British Government subscribed £1,700,000 of the share capital. To promote the flotation of this company the British Government undertook to advance £1 for every pound of share capital subscribed by the public up to £1,000,000, and thereafter a further £1 for every £4 of additional share capital subscribed up to a maximum of £500,000. The amount actually invested by the Government, as indicated above, is £1,700,000, which amounted to three-fifths of the entire capital of the company, thus giving the British Government the dominating investment in the business.

The result of these transactions was that the British Dyes (Ltd.) and Levinstein's (Ltd.) occupied practically the entire British dye field. Levinstein (Ltd.) afterwards sold the recipe for making synthetic indigo to the E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. for $1,250,000. Plans were later perfected for the amalgamation of British Dyes (Ltd.) and Levinstein (Ltd.) into a new corporation denominated British Dyestuffs Corporation. This scheme was the direct promotion of the British Board of Trade. The plan called for great augmentation in the capital and the floating of the necessary securities in the public investment market. The prospectus issued by the board of trade guaranteed to purchasers of the new shares a 10-year embargo against the import of foreign dyes. Public subscriptions of the new securities amounted to $25,000,000. The amalgamation of the British Dyes (Ltd.) and Levinstein (Ltd.) into the new British Dyestuffs Corporation was actually effected in July, 1919.

Before this plan was effected the president of the board of trade stated in the House of Commons on the 15th of May, 1918, that—

> In order to safeguard this particular industry, * * * the importation of all dyestuffs shall be controlled by a system of licenses for a period of not less than 10 years after the war.

Accordingly the bill for the act to regulate the importation of dyestuffs was brought into Parliament by the board of trade with the support of the Government. The bill provoked opposition, but the Government was constrained to pass the same because of the pledges which had been made to subscribers of the shares of the British Dyestuffs Corporation that an embargo would be granted.

Lord Moulton, in the debate on the passage of this bill in the House of Lords on December 21, 1920, said:

> Remember that you can not shut your eyes to the fact that irregular or not, the Government pledged this protection to the industry and allowed millions to be subscribed on the face of that pledge. It was put in the prospectus with the direct consent and approbation of the Government itself. You can not shut your eyes to this, that if you are going to say that the Government is not bound under the circumstances to give it that protection, you have given a blow to the trust of the English people in the good faith, not only of the Government but of the nation, from which they will never recover.

When the bill was in the House of Commons on the 15th of November, 1920, Mr. David Lloyd-George, Prime Minister, regarded the pledges in the prospectus of the British Dyestuffs Corporation as a Government obligation and explained the position of the Government thus:

As to the second part, the Government is prepared to give an undertaking that the first measure to be dealt with in the coming session will include the Government's proposal for carrying out their pledges in this matter, and their obligations as contained in the prospectus of the British Dyestuffs Corporation.

And on December 17, two days later, Sir R. Horne, then president of the board of trade, made the following statement in the House of Commons:

We are now in the year 1920, and I submit with complete confidence to the House that when there was issued, with the acquiescence, knowledge, and consent of the Government, a prospectus which asks for money from the public with no suggestion of limitation of profit, it would be nothing short of a gross breach of faith if to-day you sought to impose such a restriction. Further, all public confidence in respect of companies formed for the assistance of our country would be destroyed if we once began to deal in that way with what after all are matters of public faith. It is further true that more money will be required in the future for the support of this dye industry and your chances of getting any from the public, which you have once cheated and deceived, will be very slight indeed.

Objections were urged against the bill that no limitation of profits was prescribed and that no provision was made that any of the funds of the corporation be employed for research. But the Government regarded these points and the amendments offered to make provision for them as material variations from the prospectus given to the public, and the amendments were not accepted. The controlling reason ascribed for the enactment of the act to regulate the importation of dyestuffs was the redemption of the promises of the Government to the persons who had subscribed part of the share capital to supplement the already heavy investments of the Government in the dye industry. But during the debate a great many points were made against the policy of the measure which were not controverted by the majority, which, as indicated above, put the whole burden of their action upon the public pledges that had been given. It was urged against the bill that a licensing system can not prevent unfairness, breeds corruption, and creates bureaucrats whose vanity and inexperience are easily preyed upon by interested parties.

I pause to observe that this was a point well taken. The vanity and inexperience, not to say the arrogance and ignorance, that we encounter in the bureaucracy that infests the executive offices in this city is intolerable, and the humiliation to which men of enterprise and affairs are subjected by being compelled to submit questions affecting the conduct of their private affairs to vain, inexperienced, and often ignorant and arrogant bureaucrats is a condition which calls for remedy and relief. We ought to go over the statutes creating these bureaus with a blue pencil and excise from the law of the land every provision that savors of bureaucracy or authorizes, directly or by inference, bureaucratic control of the affairs of the people. It was objected in the House of Commons that the dye control act would jeopardize the foreign textile trade of Great Britain, which is regarded as the backbone of British foreign trade, and that the bill would put the British textile trades at a disadvantage when competing in foreign markets with countries which have unrestricted access to the German colors. It was shown that the large majority of textile manufacturers were opposed to the bill, and furthermore it was shown that the German dye industry was not built up by protection and subsidies but by patient application and diligent research, and that a self-sustaining and permanent dye industry could not be built up in Great Britain by any other means.

Bureaucracy can not be cured of its inevitable evils by merely changing the personnel of the bureaucrats. And it, moreover, can not be cured by the reform or good intentions of the bureaucrats. The thing is inherently wrong and is not susceptible of radical improvement. Bureaucratic control of business is especially reprehensible. No man is qualified to have the management of any business unless he assumes responsibility for the revenues of the business. He must know that he has to earn before he can spend or rather that every dollar laid out in expenditures must be so laid out that it will return with a profit in the revenues of the business. The bureaucrats who run government enterprises have no such responsibility. They spend money freely enough, but have no responsibility for raising money, and the inevitable result is deficits and bankruptcy. We have had ample demonstration of this fact in the Government administration of the railroads and in the Government building and operation of ships. The whole thing is a colossal blunder and a failure which ought to have been foreseen and forestalled.

The embarkation of the British Government into a monopolistic enterprise for the making of dyes in England has worked the inevitable results of bureaucracy.

The British Dyestuffs Corporation for the fiscal year ending October 1 last had a deficit of £1,066,660. Dr. Herbert Levinstein has resigned as a member of the board of directors of the corporation. Doctor Levinstein is one of the most experienced men in England in the dyestuff manufacture, and his resignation is due to the fact that he realizes the hopelessness of bureaucratic control and is unwilling to assume further responsibility for the blunders and mistakes of the political control that is exercised over the affairs of the corporation. When the question was recently asked in the House of Commons as to whether the Government members on the board of the company were equipped with expert knowledge and practical experience the president of the board of trade replied that the Government representatives had much experience in the direction of large commercial and industrial undertakings.

I do not regard detailed technical knowledge—

Said he—

as necessary in the case of government directors.

I presume that the only qualification for Government or political directors in business is that the persons shall have had such connection with financial affairs as to be able to quickly expend vast sums of money. This, I must say in all candor, seems to have been the principal qualification of the men who have had the management of the corporations which Congress has authorized and supplied with Government funds almost without limit. They have spent and spent and spent without care or foreknowledge as to whether the money they were laying out so lavishly would possibly come back in the returns or revenues of the business. They come to Congress with huge deficits and we vote great supply bills to take care of the blundering course of these bureaucrats. And this system will continue as long as we permit Government moneys to be used in the field which properly belongs to private enterprise and industry.

But to recur to the subject of the consequences of bureaucratic control of dye production and importation of dyestuffs in England. A dispatch from London, dated May 26, ultimo, to the Daily News Record, of New York, reports the chairman of the British Cotton and Wool Dyers' Association as having said at a general meeting of the corporation at Manchester that many orders for dyed yarns and cloth and printed calicoes are finding their way into the hands of continental dyers and calico printers, with a loss to thousands of British workers, as practically all these goods are subsequently shipped direct from continental ports to India and other markets. This situation has been acute for months, and is reflected in articles which appeared in the Manchester Daily Dispatch on February 17 and 18, last, which I ask may be inserted in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

WHAT THE EMBARGO SYSTEM IS DOING FOR THE BRITISH TEXTILE INDUSTRY—BLOW TO OUR DYEING—LANCASHIRE TRADE IN HANDS OF DUTCH AND GERMANS.

"The British dyeing industry is being killed as the result of the limitation and delays caused by the licensing committee. Foreign manufacturers, who suffer no restrictions as to the dyes they shall use, are capturing all our export trade.

"The British dyer is compelled to use British dyes, no matter how inferior may be their quality and how useless for his purposes. The trouble is that the work of the licensing committee is drifting into the hands of officials who have no knowledge of the trade beyond what they learned under war conditions."

In these terms a leading member of the Lancashire dyeing trade described to a Daily Dispatch representative the grave position with which the industry is faced.

The most serious feature is the fact that the dyeing industry is moving to the Continent. The following is the course of this latest development:

1. German establishments are now engaged, almost exclusively in some cases, in printing and dyeing Lancashire piece goods.

2. English goods are going to Holland to be finished and packed at a little more than half the British charges.

The last-named development takes effect in the following way:

Material dyed and printed in Holland.
Folding and packing done in Holland.
Bales and cases made by Dutch workmen.
Transport carried out by Dutch workers.
Finished product shipped to the Far East in Dutch vessels.

"Many of the firms whose businesses are being strangled by the obstructionist methods of the committee," said our informant, "have invested large sums in the British dyestuffs industry and therefore would be glad to employ the home product if it could be made to give satisfaction. But there is no doubt that in the vast majority of cases the British dye is not comparable in price, strength, and quality to the German article, and dyers absolutely decline to use it.

REAMS OF CORRESPONDENCE.

"Firms all over the country are striving to recapture their export trade from foreign competitors. The latter, with full access to German dyes, can make prompt delivery of fully satisfactory material at half the price the home manufacturer can quote.

"If the British maker is lucky enough to obtain a contract he has to set about the protracted business of securing a license to import German dyes. This may generally be calculated to occupy three or four months.

"The committee is perfectly willing to go on writing letters as long as the applicant will write to them. Very often he gets wearied, and has to manage with a British dye which is not only costly but quite unsuited to his purposes, in which case British reputation suffers and subsequently orders go to the foreigner.

"The licensing committee can only reiterate in answer to every appeal that it regrets it is unable to grant the license to import German dyes because it understands there is a suitable British product available. The statement is made in letters written month after month to firms who, after years of experience, know that only German dyes will meet their requirements, and who demonstrate to the committee the utter uselessness of the British dyes.

"There is an establishment in Germany at the present moment that is exclusively engaged in printing and dyeing Lancashire cotton goods.

"Shippers are sending thousands of yards of material to be similarly treated in Holland, for the Dutch dyer's charge, including transport, is little more than half what the British dyer can afford to quote.

"Our shipping, carpentry, transport, and dyeing trades all have vast numbers of unemployed for whom work could be found if the irritating restrictions of the dyestuffs act were removed.

"We could bring about a trade revival with a speed that most people would think incredible if we were given freedom of action. If the régime of the licensing committee is not terminated one can only see extinction ahead."

Our informant produced numerous files of correspondence in relation to applications for import licenses. A firm of ink, stain, and polish manufacturers withdrew their application after debating the question with the committee for seven months last year. The firm stated that only a particular German dye would suit their needs, as perfect solubility was required. The committee, in several letters, referred them to a British product which they understood to be suitable, though the firm repeatedly pointed out that they had been acquainted with the dye indicated for years and that they were unable to use it on account of its insolubility.

A Lancashire dyer, who after a long period of business depression obtained a contract to supply many thousand yards of a dyed drill per week, is unable to deliver the order to specification and is threatened with penalties for breach of contract in consequence of an import license being denied him. The contract was obtained in the face of heavy competition from Belgium and Holland.

OFFICIAL FATUITY.

The first application was made months ago, and the committee referred him to a British dye. A sample was tested by an expert, who found it was not a match in shade, strength, or properties. It was a mixture of at least three colors, whereas a uniform dye, consisting of only one ingredient, was required. After all sorts of objections a license for 120 pounds, a week's supply, was granted three months later.

As continuity of supply was the dyer's first requirement, he wrote to the licensing committee pointing out that the case had been debated over a period of more than three months and presumably was settled. Quite recently the committee replied that they were unable to grant further licenses for this color, as the British dye makers had brought out a matching shade. This is the same as the one which was proved at the outset to be useless.

The dyer has the gray yarn in his store, his men are walking the streets of a Lancashire town, and his looms are idle.

"We want to support the British dye industry wherever possible," said our informant, "but where it is proved that British dye is hopelessly outclassed, ought we to be compelled to use it to the ruin of our own trade and the injury of general industry?

"If British dyestuff makers had concentrated on a few lines which they could make satisfactorily instead of trying to compete with all the German range, the industry might have been developed successfully. Instead of that they have tried to compete with the most highly capitalized and highly organized industry in the world, the Interessen Gemeinschaft of Germany, and have made a mess of almost everything.

"To make dyes you have got to make a multitude of other things, and it is on the completeness of your arrangements for the disposal of your by-products that the price at which you can sell depends. One department of the German combination is said to obtain such a price for its by-products that it could afford to give its dyes away. Another has discovered a way for making photographer's 'hypo' from the effluent of sulphur dye for cotton blacks, and this, of course, has a material effect on the price at which the dye can be marketed." WHAT THE EMBARGO SYSTEM IS DOING FOR THE BRITISH TEXTILE INDUSTRY—CUT THE DYES CORDON—TRADE BABY THAT IS KILLING PARENT INDUSTRY—REPEAL HINT—GERMANY'S BRIBE TO BEST BRITISH WORKERS.

Business men throughout the country welcomed the Daily Dispatch's article yesterday, exposing the injury inflicted on the country's trade by the dilatory methods of the dyestuffs licensing committee.

With one accord Lancashire dyers and members of the country's textile trade express approval of the article. "We have needed someone to voice our case for a long time," said a leading figure in Lancashire industry to the Daily Dispatch yesterday.

"You have revealed all the anomalies and official stupidities which have been strangling trade ever since the dyestuffs act came into operation. Your wording was not a bit too strong, and business men in London and the far north have been in communication with me to-day and have said how cordially they support your attitude."

The information comes from an official source that the dyestuffs act will not exist much longer, but no one cares to state exactly when a period will be put to its operation.

It is interesting to note that the licensing committee, which sat in Manchester yesterday, granted a license to a Lancashire manufacturer who had suffered inconvenience and loss for a long time through the withholding of permission to import German dyes. This is the manufacturer who, as we stated yesterday, was under contract to supply 25,000 yards of material a week, whose men have been idle and he himself threatened with heavy penalties for breach of undertaking.

GOODS REJECTED.

The manufacturer was assured by the committee yesterday that there would be no further difficulty placed in the way of his obtaining supplies. His need is so urgent that he immediately cabled to Germany for supplies to be dispatched by passenger train.

In the meantime he has had thousands of yards of a material dyed with the substitute British product thrown back on his hands, the inferior finish making it useless to the prospective purchaser.

A peril perhaps even greater from its disastrous potentialities than the present migration of our trade to the Continent is the inducement which foreign nations are holding out to our expert workmen to go abroad and teach them the business. Holland, Germany, Belgium, South America, and even Japan, are learning how to make those goods on the supply of which this country, and Lancashire in particular, formerly thrived.

Germany knows how to make dyes, but admits that her workmen can not be compared to the expert Lancashire operatives in the application of them. Other competing countries suffer similarly.

But they are commercially shrewd, and while their dyeing works and kindred establishments are working at full capacity, supply the orders which the shilly-shallying methods and short-sightedness of the licensing committee are losing to British trade, they are tempting the unemployed but clever British workmen to make them expert, too. The menace to the future of British commerce needs no further demonstration.

FREEDOM FIRST.

"The Government are trying to bolster up a concern with a capital of over nine millions, and they are hampering British industry generally to the tune of hundreds of millions a year," said a prominent Lancashire business man yesterday.

"Our extremity is so great that we feel if the Government insist on this policy (continuing the safeguarding of industries and dyestuffs acts) it would pay the Lancashire and Yorkshire textile manufacturers collectively to guarantee the dividend on the capital of the British dye industry in order to be assured of freedom to buy supplies where they like. The tax per hundred thousand yards of cloth would be infinitesimal, and in any case manufacturers would be willing to incur considerable liability in order to be released from the licensing committee's stranglehold.

"It is fatuous to declare that the dyestuffs is a key industry at all unless you can imagine Britain again being reduced to the state of isolation in which she found herself during the war.

"Yet it is a fact that if the whole of the dyestuffs plant available were turned onto the manufacturer of T. N. T. it could only make a very low percentage—a single-figure one—of the nation's requirements, based on the quantities in the Great War.

"Business men are compelled to put to themselves the question: 'Is the country's whole commercial prestige to be shattered in order to provide for a problematical contingency, and one not likely to occur in our lifetime?'

"It would be less costly to pay a subsidy to maintain the plant even for these problematical war purposes. We want to see the British dye industry prosperous, but we will not allow the whole fabric of our trade to be destroyed on account of it. If it is an advantage for the country to be in a state of preparedness for war, the burden of maintenance should be borne by the whole community and not by struggling trade."

LURE TO WORKERS.

Mr. J. Hinchley, the secretary of the Foremen's Guild of the Dyeing and Calico Printing Trade, outlines the tempting inducements which are being held out by foreign manufacturers to British workmen:

"Every worker in the cotton trade should seriously consider yesterday's article in the Daily Dispatch," he says.

"We are all concerned in the future of trade, and to-day I think we are losing, through the folly of the act, our foreign business. We have 2,000 foremen in our guild, and they embrace some of the cleverest men in the trade, men who are skilled in calico printing and dyeing. The foreigner knows this and also knows how we are fixed for our dye supplies.

"So huge offers are made to our men to go out. Some foremen have gone, and others are considering proposals that have been made to them. It is a great temptation to young fellows who have seen some of the world to go abroad where they are free from the harassing conditions we have to stand here.

"To-day manufacturers and dyers and printers are working to perhaps not more than 50 to 60 per cent of the normal, and I fancy the Germans are quietly chuckling over our difficulties. We can not get dyes to match, the quantity of cloth rejected grows, and the operatives are at their wits' end to deal with the problem. The German price is about one-third of ours, and the dyes give a better result.

"So acute is the position that one firm of which I know has sent 20,000 'lumps' to Germany to be dyed during the last few months.

"Belgium has got her famous copper rolls, buried during the war, into operation again, and her factories are working about 10 hours per day. A firm in Brussels is asking for a good English foreman to take charge and teach them a little."

Mr. Hinchley added that a Japanese firm had offered a fabulous figure for a foreman, and Indian firms were also prepared to pay heavily.

Mr. KING. It was inevitable that the question of the repeal of the act to regulate the importation of dyestuffs should be brought up in Parliament, nothwithstanding that the act is a policy of the present Government and there are political impediments to its repeal. On March 15 last in the House of Commons Mr. Remer, of Macclesfield, asked leave to bring in a bill to repeal the dyestuffs embargo act. In support of his proposal he said, as reported in the issue of the Manchester Guardian of March 16—may this be inserted without reading?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

It may be that some honorable members who cheer think that I have changed my opinion. [Opposition cheers.] I am still in favor of protection of efficient industries, but I will not allow this act to be foisted upon me as an example of protectionist legislation. [Opposition cheers.] I am not in favor of any form of protection which has for its object mere profiteering purposes, but only for the purpose of preventing efficient industries from being driven abroad to foreign countries. This act is mere prohibition. Importation being by license, it does not provide real protection. I submit that the dyes industry, which was introduced into this country during the war, has by this act been proved beyond any manner of doubt to be a thoroughly inefficient industry.

British Dyes (Ltd.) have charged monstrous prices for very inefficient material [opposition cheers], and in spite of that fact have been unable to make any profits. [Opposition cheers.] Some years ago an act of Parliament was passed, known as the patents act, introduced by the present Prime Minister, then president of the board of trade, and one of the industries which was established in this country as the result of that act was a factory to make what is known as synthetic indigo. That factory is now owned by British Dyes (Ltd.). They charge 2s. per pound for this synthetic indigo, whereas the same material can be purchased from abroad at 8d. per pound. If protection be necessary for the dye industry, why is it not also necessary for the materials which are made from dyes, such as dyed yarn and dyed silk? [Opposition cheers and laughter.]

I will read a letter which I have received this morning and which shows conclusively, I think, the issue upon which I am asking leave to introduce this bill. A well-known firm in Manchester—I am prepared to give the name if I am asked to do so—applied to the dyes advisory committee early in February for a permit to buy 1 ton of lythol red B. M. powder from Germany at 9s. per pound. This was refused, and they were told to use an English substitute, the monolite red, at 16s. per pound. This made a difference on the actual cost of the manufacture, which was known as lake color, of £798. One ton of dyes makes 9½ tons of dry lake color, and the difference at £84 per ton is £798.

The letter goes on to say:

"What those people do not realize and refuse to see is that the consequences were (1) our customer bought abroad and we lost the business altogether; (2) our work people would have had a full three weeks work, and we have been on short time since October; (3) to people like ourselves aniline dyes of the high class are our raw material as much as coal; and (4) they have absolutely killed our foreign business which took 40 years to establish." [Opposition cheers.]

Yet in spite of that fact the goods which they are manufacturing are allowed to come in free and there is no protection whatsoever. There is a still more important reason why I am asking to introduce this bill. The administration of the act has been deplorably bad. [Opposition cheers.] Licenses have not been given to substantial people in the trade, but to men of straw, who have made enormous profits by illicit importation. I say, further, that the administration of the act gives an unfair advantage to trade competitors who are on the licensing committee and who get information as to their competitors' business. I say that the act has given no protection at all to the consumers of dyes. It has produced dear dyes and bad dyes. [Opposition cheers.]

Furthermore, I say that British Dyes (Ltd.) has been very badly managed. The people who have been put on the directorate by the Government have been the wrong people. Whatever other methods may be adopted to protect the dye industry, this is the wrong method. Therefore, for these reasons, I ask leave to introduce this bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. Remer is one of the members of the House of Commons who voted for the passage of the dye embargo act in December, 1920. His position now indicates that he has changed his mind on the question of the feasibility and policy of an embargo against the importation of dyes. It must be remembered that the dye embargo act is a policy of the Government or the present parliamentary majority. But in the division on the bill, to repeal the dye embargo act, many coalition Liberals who nominally support the present Government voted for the bill, or rather, to be more precise, voted to permit the introduction of the bill to repeal the dye embargo act, which is the form the question took in the House of Commons. A number of ministers, including Mr. Short, Mr. Fisher, Mr. Munro, and Sir William Sutherland, decided not to vote at all, and, as reported in the British press, "sat out the division on the treasury bench." The fair inference is that these ministers were really in favor of the repeal of the embargo act, but because of the commitments of the Government they were not at liberty to vote in favor of the repeal bill.

The division showed 115 votes for the repeal bill and 197 against leave for its introduction. This vote demonstrates that there is a strong and militant minority definitely determined to repeal the dye embargo act. It is also certain that the real majority opinion in the House of Commons is against the continuation of the embargo and that its repeal is inevitable. The embargo has caused the sending of great quantities of British textiles to be dyed and finished in Holland, with consequent tendency toward stagnation in both the British textile and dye industries. The reaction is distinctly against the embargo. The embargo, moreover, has proven to be ineffective, as far as assuring profits on the share capital of the British Dyestuffs Corporation. I have already stated that the British Dyestuffs Corporation made a large deficit last year, and consequently no dividends were paid or are being paid to the shareholders of the corporation. The embargo has proven to be detrimental to both the tetxile and dye trade, and as it is now being realized that it is both futile and fatuous as a means of producing or protecting the profits of the British Dyestuffs Corporation, the proponents of the embargo will themselves be constrained to abandon the same and it is certain that the Government itself will take measures for its repeal within the near future.

REPARATION DYES FREE.

It is claimed by the proponents of the dye embargo in this country that France has an embargo and that therefore the United States should have an embargo. In any consideration of the situation in France we must understand that the French are supersensitive on the question of national defense as against Germany and it is only fair to say that if there is a nation anywhere which will be impelled by a defense policy to foster the dye industry for the purpose of national defense that nation will be France. But the outstanding fact is that the French embargo is primarily an economic policy and is not dictated out of any consideration of national defense.

The French Government has embargoed many other German products besides dyes. Moreover, the French embargo on dyes, chemicals, and drugs applies only to Germany, and great quantities of these materials are imported from Switzerland free of any embargo restrictions and subject only to the regular imposts. It must also be borne in mind that France is receiving her regular quota of reparation dyes, which amounts to 15 per cent of the amount delivered currently to the Reparations Commission. These dyes are admitted into France free of duty. No licenses are required for the import of dyes from Switzerland, and the Swiss are situated very favorably for delivery of dyes to France. There are also sentimental reasons which cause the French to prefer to buy from the Swiss than from the German. In the calendar year 1914 only one-fifth of the dyes imported into France came from Germany and about 78 per cent, or nearly four-fifths, of the French imports of dyes came from Switzerland. The French dye makers produce three-fourths of the domestic requirements. The fact is that France is receiving to-day from the Reparations Commission more German dyes—and these are admitted free of duty—than France received from Germany before the war. This means that France is patronizing the German dye industry to a greater extent than before the war, and that the French policy is wholly one of economics and has no relation to chemical warfare or military defense. France, in other words, is getting all the German dyes she wants or can use from the Reparations Commission, and for these dye imports Germany is given credit against reparations due France, and France procures the dyes on account of the German reparations and indemnities and does not have to pay out current funds for the same. These German imports are really a source of revenue to the Government. The French policy in regard to German dyes has no relation to the military defense of France, and is, of course, in no wise a precedent of persuasive value in connection with the action we should take upon the pending bill. The latest information is that the French have made a deal with the German dye interests whereby the Germans furnish the formulæ and chemists for the French dye plants, and the French divide profits with the Germans as to dyes made under the agreement.

Dye propagandists in this country in their zeal to impress us with the desirability of an embargo tell us that Italy has an embargo. It is true that the Italian Government on February 3, 1921, a little more than a year ago, promulgated an act prohibiting the importation of coal-tar dyes and intermediates. The language of the Italian act is:

Until otherwise provided the importation of organic synthetic dyestuffs and of organic intermediate products for the manufacture thereof are prohibited.

The embargo became effective on June 23, 1921. The minister of finance has the power to issue permits for the import of dyestuffs and intermediates.

The act has been in force just a year, and there doubtless have been relatively large imports of foreign dyes under the license of the minister of finance. Italy has neither coal nor the other primary chemicals required for the making of synthetic dyes. The total Italian production of coal-tar dyes for 1918 was 2,000 tons. These consisted almost wholly of sulphur dyes, which are the easiest dyes to manufacture. Sulphur black, for example, is not produced from coal-tar intermediates, but is derived from the chemical treatment of sawdust. Imports of coal-tar dyes in Italy in 1918 were 1,500 tons. At the present time Italy imports about one-half of her dye requirement from foreign countries. The Italian share of the reparation dyes is about equal to the Italian requirements for imported dyes. It is not believed that it will be possible for Italy to establish a synthetic dye industry, and it is certain that the so-called "embargo law" will not be effective for this purpose. As it is to-day, Italy is receiving her necessary quota of foreign dyes from reparation sources, and when deliveries of reparation dyes by the German factories terminate on January 1, 1925, the Italians will have to repeal the embargo or license the importation of the synthetic dyes that are required in that country.

The American attaché in Rome in a letter dated November 12, 1919, said:

Some mushroom dye plants sprang up in Italy during the war, but Italian dyes are makeshifts at the best. They lack the raw material here for the fabrication of aniline dyes even if they possessed the proper scientific technique. Caustic soda must be purchased heavily from abroad.

The Department of Commerce, in a memorandum referring to the Italian dye industry, says:

The Italian artificial-dye industry has made little progress, and even if it is afforded a strong measure of tariff protection there is little reason to expect rapid development in this line. Italy will continue to derive the bulk of its supplies from abroad, as before the war.

The Italian consumption of dyes is so small as compared to the consumption in the United States, and the conditions and facilities for production are so different as between the two countries, that there is no basis for comparison, and no conclusions or inferences can be made from the condition and prospects of the synthetic-dye industry in Italy or from the policy of the Italian Government with respect thereto which have any validity or application to the policy which should be pursued in the United States or to the provisions of the pending bill.

Dye-embargo propagandists have been flippant enough to assert that Japan has an embargo against the importation of foreign dyes. There is no truth in this statement. Japan has no embargo against the importation of foreign dyes. Synthetic dyes are freely imported into Japan, subject only to the payment of the duty of 35 per cent ad valorem. There are no specific duties imposed upon the importation of dyes by Japanese law.

Japan had a dye embargo, but this was an embargo against the export of dyes from Japan, and the embargo was against the export of either domestic or imported dyes; so that Japanese embargo, the only one ever enforced in Japan, was, as it affected foreign dyes, an embargo against the reexport of such dyes. This was a temporary war measure and has since then been abandoned.

In March, 1915, a commission of the Japanese Government, after a study of the dye industry, present and prospective, of Japan, made an official report recommending that the industry be subsidized. This subsidy was to take the form of Treasury loans at no interest, transport of materials at a discount, and a bounty on production. A bill was drawn accordingly and enacted by the Japanese Diet. Bounties are granted for a term of 10 years to any company producing synthetic dyes the capital to which is subscribed by Japanese subjects.

The bounty amounts to a guaranty of 8 per cent profits per annum on the capital investment in the business. The bounty is available for 10 years from the date the company begins business, and there is otherwise no limit on the operation of the law; that is, new companies may enjoy the bounty without regard to the date of organization.

Under these arrangements there has been a great expansion in the Japanese dye industry. In 1920 there were 97 dye plants in Japan, and this number represents quite a reduction in the number of former independent concerns brought about by amalgamation and concentration in the industry.

In 1918 the exports of American dyes to Japan exceeded the pre-war German export of dyes to Japan. In this year Japanese imports of American aniline dyes were 1,392,384 kin, as against importations from Germany of 349,603 kin and from Switzerland of 125,309 kin. Imports from all other countries amounted to about 50,000 kin. A Japanese kin is the equivalent of 1⅓ pounds.

There has been a great slump in the textile trade in Japan and China. The depression was already severe at the beginning of 1920, and this condition, as was inevitable, has reflected itself in a great diminution in the demand for dyes by the Japanese and the Chinese markets. Market conditions, moreover, have been aggravated by the fact that the Japanese and Chinese dye markets are practically the only large open dye markets in the world, open in the sense that they are free from the restrictions of embargo legislation. The embargoes in England, in France, in Italy, in the United States have had the direct effect of forcing great volumes of foreign dyes into the Japanese market at the very time of depression in the textile trade and in commerce generally in that country. American indigo, for example, has gone to Japan to compete with indigo from Germany, England, and France. For the first 10 months of 1921, which are the latest figures available, imports of German indigo amounted to a little over half of the total indigo imports. The condition in the Japanese dye market is reflected by a statement appearing in the commercial supplement of the Japanese Weekly Chronicle of March 16, 1922:

The dye market in Japan, as noted, has been severely hit by the congested cargoes imported from Germany, America, Switzerland, and France which are sold at a very low figure owing to the keen competition. Accordingly the dealers are now avoiding heavy stocks and confining their transactions to acting as brokers between the direct importers and the actual consumers. The buyers, moreover, are only buying for the actual demands, and the terms of settlement, which used to be 60 days' sight, is now extended to 90 days' sight.

The competitive sale of artificial indigo imported from Germany, Switzerland, America, and France has not been so keen, owing to the low price of German indigo, which was bought up at the end of last year, and the shortage of the artificial indigo in the market. Since then importing from these countries has been increasing and at the end of February it reached such amounts, in addition to the present stocks, as 400 casks of the Swiss, 260 casks of the French, and the American must have reached about 400 casks. The German indigo is again finding a difficulty in effecting sales on the market. In spite of its being now the season for demand of this material in Japan, the market is forced to quote at such low figures as 380 yen for the American and 395 yen for the Swiss, a decline of 50 yen per cask, approximately. Keen competition in this market is naturally expected.

I desire again to say that the conditions in the Japanese and oriental dye markets, particularly as affecting American exports to those markets, are aggravated by embargoes in England, France, and Italy, and the embargo legislation in our own country. A fair consideration of this situation will preclude any continuation of this policy.

We are, of course, primarily concerned with the welfare of our own country, of the dye industry, and of our other industries, and if we must differentiate between them we should differentiate in the order of their economic importance.

In 1920 the production of American dyestuffs reached the high-water mark of 88,000,000 pounds. In 1921 the American dyestuffs sold in the home market, for home consumption, amounted to 45,000,000 pounds. It is an obvious fact that from a poundage standpoint at least the capacity of American dye plants is now double the dye-consuming capacity of the American textile industry. One-half of the poundage of dyes consumed in this country, and in fact in the world, is made up of sulphur black, direct black, or indigo dyes. Our dye plants have specialized in quantity production, particularly of the dyes mentioned and of other dyes of which there is a large quantity consumption.

In the production of sulphur black, direct black, and indigo not only is the capacity of American dye plants equal to double the requirements for domestic consumption but our capacity for the production of these primary dyes is adequate to supply the consumption of the whole world. If our dye industry is to continue in its present proportions, it is inexorable that foreign markets be found for American dyes. If every country in the world, following our example, heeds the cry of its patriotic profiteers and gas-defense fanatics and embargoes dyes, what becomes of the foreign market for American dyes? We are in no position to provoke retaliation or even emulation in dealing with embargo legislation.

Important as the dye industry is, the textile industry of America is many times more important. The value of our dye production for 1917 was $67,000,000 and our average production for the two years of 1920 and 1921 is likewise $67,000,000. Against this the products of the American textile industry in textile and fabric materials for the year 1919 was $5,482,000,000. The value of our normal production of dyes is only 1¼ per cent of the value of our annual production of textiles and fabric materials. In other words, the annual products of our textile industry have about eighty-two times the value of the annual product of our dye industry. Our textile trades demand relief from the exactions, interferences, and general nuisance of bureaucratic embargo arrangements, and the dye trade itself demands relief from the bureaucratic and arbitrary and illegal interference with the trade upon the part of such organizations of the so-called Textile Alliance, which is assuming to exercise the prerogative of the Government without warrant of law and in illegal extension of its corporate powers. The only reason there is for the consideration of this embargo legislation is that the American Dyes Institute, including the domestic dye manufacturers and many corporations engaged in producing medicinals, drugs, pharmaceuticals, and chemical products, the Chemical Foundation, and the Textile Alliance want and have entered into a conspiracy to obtain it. Our answer to their importunities should be that we will liberate the industries of the United States—the textile trades and the dye trade—from bureaucratic direction and domination, and that we will put an end to the war legislation out of which these abnormal conditions have arisen and which these propagandists demand shall be perpetuated for their own aggrandizement and without regard to the wealth of the country or the welfare of the people. We may then expect the textile industry and the dye industry to pursue a normal course and reach an adjustment and stability which has already been too long interdicted by the continuation of the abnormal restraints and interferences of the war.

OF

HON. GUY U. HARDY,

OF COLORADO.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 28, 1922.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, the greatest business institution in all the world is the United States of America. Its one hundred and ten millions of people are its stockholders. They enjoy great liberty and freedom under its laws, and protection from the enemies of liberty within and without the borders of our land. For this we pay the bills. The bills are presented and collected in the shape of various forms of taxes.

The Congress may be said to represent the board of directors of this great business institution. The President heads the executive branch of the business.

In 1918 the people who are stockholders became dissatisfied with the management of their affairs and they changed the board of directors—electing a Republican Congress.

In 1920 the entire executive branch of the Government was changed by the election of a Republican President and another Republican Congress.

Only since March 4, 1921, has the entire management of business affairs of the country been in the hands of Republicans.

It is quite proper that the stockholders should begin to look into the conduct of their affairs under this new management. They should not expect too much in this short time, but they are entitled to know how things are running.

Representing as I do some 250,000 of these stockholders I am proud, indeed, to make some accounting to them of the trust they and the country have reposed in me and you, my fellow Members.

You can not take a run-down business enterprise anywhere which has been wrecked by wasteful and extravagant management and correct all its faults and put it back on a big-paying basis in a day or year. It requires time for a new management to correct evils, change policies, train new forces of employees and retrain old ones, eliminate wasteful practices, and reorganize the enterprise generally.

This new administration has not done everything that may have been proposed by idealists for it to do.

But it has done in one short year more than any business man would a year ago have seriously predicted it could do.

It has done more toward getting the country back on a solid business basis than any serious-minded campaign orator ever promised the people it would do.

This Republican Congress and Republican administration have—

Cut the Nation's debt $1,000,000,000 in one short year.

Cut appropriations for expenditures of the Government below what they were for the year ending June 30, 1921, by over $1,000,000,000.

Cut actual expenditures for fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, more than $3,000,000,000 below what they were for year 1920.

Cut taxation for this year more than $818,000,000.

Cut the pay roll of the Government, including Army, Navy, and civilians, down from 1,186,052 persons, which it was in 1920, to about 777,000 for this fiscal year.

Adopted a budget system which has been largely responsible for great saving in expenses.

Brought the selling value of your Liberty bonds up to above par, adding about $3,000,000,000 to the value of these issues.

Given you the emergency tariff which greatly aided agriculture and stock raising and saved many from bankruptcy.

Revived the War Finance Corporation which has loaned over $350,000,000 and has proved to be of immense value to agricultural sections of the land.

Initiated and led in the great limitation of armament conference which is the greatest step yet taken toward world-wide peace, and its results will save this country of ours several billions of dollars.

Surely a wonderful record of business achievement. A record of good business management probably never equaled in any land.

DEMOCRATIC EXTRAVAGANCE AND REPUBLICAN ECONOMY.

Let us go back a little ways in looking into the affairs of this big business enterprise.

The Republican Congress that was elected in 1918 was called in special session in May, 1919, to pass the regular appropriation bills which the Senate had failed to pass in the outgoing Congress.

The eight principal appropriation bills had passed the Democratic House, but got hung up in the Senate. As passed by the Democratic House they amounted to $3,767,975,974. The new Congress took these same bills and cut them down to $2,828,283,432, saving the country the modest sum of $939,692,541 on its 1920 expenditures.

Before the Budget system was adopted the President conferred with heads of departments and sent in a book of estimates, which set forth the amounts these heads of the Government enterprises claimed was necessary for running the Government.

The estimates sent in by President Wilson for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1921 and 1922, were scrutinized closely by Congress and the magnificent sum of $2,950,000,000 was cut out of the estimates. This means that the Congress decides what the Government can or can not spend, and the Republican Congress decided that the Government must be run on a sum $2,950,000,000 less than the President and his department heads said they needed.

So, for these three years the Republican Congress by its economical tendencies saved the country $3,890,000,000—nearly $4,000,000,000—and yet the old country wagged along pretty well under the program adopted by its economical board of directors.

Then the Budget system was adopted by Congress. It was passed first by a Republican Congress and vetoed by President Wilson. It was reenacted by the present Congress and approved by President Harding. We have been working under the Budget a little over a year. The appropriations for this fiscal year, ending June 30, 1923, were the first passed under the Budget system.

Under President Harding and Budget Director Dawes the estimates got more serious consideration than ever before in the country's history. Everybody worked together to cut down the running expenses of the Government.

The Budget estimates for this fiscal year totaled $3,919,558,429. The economical Congress cut these down $172,523,046, appropriating for this year the sum of $3,747,035,282.

This is more than a billion dollars less than it cost to run the Government only two years ago. Some saving, I would say.

Glance over this table of expenditures and note how the Republican Congress is paring down the running expenses of the Government from year to year:

Appropriations for year ending June 30, 1920	$6,454,596,649.59
Appropriations for year ending June 30, 1921	4,780,829,510.85
Appropriations for year ending June 30, 1922	4,066,316,366.74
Appropriations for year ending June 30, 1923	3,747,035,282.04

THE NATION'S DEBT.

The national debt of the country was reduced more than a billion dollars last year, which is a larger sum than the total national debt amounted to before the war.

This is a statement of the national debt:

On June 30, 1921, it was	$23,977,450,552.54
On June 30, 1922, it was	22,963,381,708.31
Reduction	1,014,062,844.23

THE GOVERNMENT PAY ROLL.

About the hardest thing to do in this world, I have observed, is to get a person off the pay roll of the Government once he or she has enjoyed the luxury of a Government salary. Everybody in the Government and many outside conspire together, it seems, to get folks on the pay roll and to keep them there. But you can not cut expenses without reducing the pay roll.

The war of course was responsible for the creation of many positions and the filling up of all departments with much help. The war was over in 1918. In 1920 the pay roll was still very large. This table shows about what it was July 31, 1920:

Civil list	691,116
Army:
Officers	25,914
Enlisted men	268,222
Navy:
Officers	7,860
Enlisted men	193,000
Total	1,186,052

In the interest of economy great reductions have been made in personnels of the Army, Navy, and civil lists. These reductions are brought about through the appropriation bills. The Congress sets the amount that can be paid out and the number of employees must be adjusted to fit the appropriations. Naturally everybody interested protested against the cuts.

The appropriations for the fiscal year will provide for about the following:

Civil list (about)	550,000
Army:
Officers	12,000
Enlisted men	125,000
Navy:
Officers	4,000
Enlisted men	86,000
Total	777,000

YOUR TAXES REDUCED.

This Congress passed laws greatly reducing your Federal taxes. The reduction this year to the taxpayers will amount to upward of $818,000,000—nearly a billion dollars again.

The greatest part of this vast saving will come to people of moderate circumstances and will be felt and appreciated in every home in the land.

The "nuisance taxes," those little items you used to have to pay on soda water, ice cream, candy, perfumery, cosmetics, tooth paste, millinery, umbrellas, parasols, stockings, shoes, wearing apparel, and a hundred other necessaries of every-day life have been abolished. You do not pay them any more. You are saved the bother, and you also save about $72,000,000.

The tax on musical instruments has been reduced. The tax on some admission fees has been abolished, and the tax on sporting goods—the tax the kiddies used to pay on footballs, baseballs, fishing tackle, and so forth—was removed, saving you and them the tidy sum of $36,000,000 a year.

The biggest saving of all comes in the tax removed from freight, express, and parcel-post bills. This amounts to about $365,000,000 a year. This tax was unquestionably paid by the ultimate consumer, and its removal certainly reduces the cost of living to the full amount. Another big item is the $91,000,000 the people paid on their passenger and Pullman fares which they do not pay any more.

Taxes on premiums for life, accident, health, fire, and other insurances amounting to $20,000,000 are removed.

Stockholders in building and loan associations have the first $300 profit each year exempt from income tax, which, of course, is chiefly of benefit to the working and salary people.

The income tax is made more favorable for folks of moderate incomes. The head of a family with an income of $5,000 a year or less gets an additional exemption of $500, and the exemption for dependents is increased from $200 to $400 for each child or dependent. This item alone saves to those of moderate incomes approximately $100,000,000 a year. Over 90 per cent of those making income-tax returns have an income of $5,000 or less, so this item in the tax-reduction program reaches many people.

Without the economies spoken of before, the cutting down of the pay rolls, the deep slashing of the appropriations bills, and the business-like administration of Government affairs, these tax reductions would have been impossible. Herein is where the stockholders are reaping the practical benefit of better business management.

UNDER THE BUDGET SYSTEM.

I want to assure you that the Congress is the economical branch of our National Government.

The departments are ambitious to serve and to build up their respective establishments. They are constantly seeking, with commendable zeal perhaps, development and new avenues for service with the necessary increases of personnel and appropriations.

The Army and Navy people oppose every suggested reduction in their establishments.

The people everywhere urge appropriations for all manner of Government enterprises and local benefits, and the home Congressman usually backs the local demand.

A large class of people—a very large class—seem to assume that if the Government does it or builds it or buys it or pays for it that it costs no man anything. They seem to think that Government money grows on bushes, to be gathered at will, or is provided by the good Lord in the shape of manna from heaven.

But it does not and it is not. Every dollar the Government spends must be collected from you and the people of the country by direct taxation.

While many departments and many people urge greater Government activities and greater appropriations, they are at the same time urging retrenchment, economy, and lower taxes.

You can not increase appropriations and reduce taxes. They go together—up or down.

So the Congress must stand between—must save the people from themselves—must use rare discrimination between demands, but must curtail expenditures if taxes are to be reduced and the public debt paid.

Along this line the Republican Congress for the last four years has directed its first attention. The Appropriations Committee is hard-boiled. It plays no favorites. It must be shown. It scrutinizes the Budget estimates closely; calls in those interested in specific appropriations and hears what they have to say; considers the needs of the department and of the country; rarely increases a Budget estimate for any enterprise, but very often reduces them.

Before the Budget system was adopted appropriations were reported out throught eight different committees in the House of Representatives. This gave many Members a chance to help frame appropriation bills. But with the adoption of the Budget system the House patriotically and unselfishly gave all power of reporting appropriation bills over to the one big Committee on Appropriations. This took from the individual members of the several appropriating committees some power and influence. It will make it harder for individual Members to get through special appropriations for local benefits. It sends all bills appropriating money to the one big committee which considers the Nation's needs for its many departments and enterprises all in a bunch—it weighs the national budget as a whole.

Handling the appropriations through the Budget system in the House has its disadvantages as well as its advantages. These disadvantages will be felt locally—by Congressmen who find it harder to get through appropriations for local benefits back home. The advantages will be felt nationally and will undoubtedly be reflected in reduced appropriations and lower taxes.

The adoption of the Budget system for which the people have been clamoring for 40 years is one of the biggest achievements of this Congress.

OF INTEREST TO FARMERS.

I think no Congress in the history of the land ever paid so much attention to the agricultural interests of this country nor ever did so much for them as has this Congress now in session.

The emergency tariff gave protection to the farmer and stock grower and saved them from the threatening flood of imports from foreign lands. Agricultural products protected, and others along with them, have unquestionably materially responded to the effects of the tariff, and those engaged in their production have been greatly benefited. The emergency tariff gave protection to products in which Colorado growers are interested as follows: Wheat, wheat flour, corn, beans, potatoes, onions, cattle, sheep, fresh or frozen beef, mutton and pork, wool, beet sugar, butter, cheese, milk, apples, and cherries.

The War Finance Corporation was revived in the interest of the producers and dealers in agricultural products. More than $350,000,000 has been loaned to those interested in the production, sale, and exportation of these products, and the loans came at a critical time when the help saved many from financial ruin. About $11,000,000 of this fund was placed in Colorado and its beneficial effect was felt throughout the State.

The Federal reserve act was amended so as to require the appointment of a farmer on the Federal Reserve Board.

The packers' act, an act to regulate the meat-packing and allied and associated industries, was strongly indorsed and advocated by the agricultural interests. This act was passed by this Congress.

The antigambling in grain futures act was passed but declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. The House of Representatives has passed another act along this line in the belief that it will fare better before the courts and yet accomplish most of the desired purposes.

A cooperating marketing act was passed which gives producers of agricultural products liberal powers to organize and engage in interstate and foreign commerce. This act will encourage the development of cooperative marketing among farmers.

A bill was passed providing for a Treasury deposit of $25,000,000 with the Farm Loan Board which greatly facilitated the working of that board and provided additional working capital that is taking care of the needs of the farm banks.

A law was enacted increasing the rate of interest on farm loan bank bonds to 5½ per cent. This has made the bonds more easily salable and has not increased the cost of interest on loans to the farm borrower.

GENERAL LEGISLATION.

The Veterans' Bureau was created. This was a consolidation under one head of all the agencies dealing with the veterans of the Great War. Something like $425,000,000 will pass through this bureau this year for the benefit of the veterans and their dependents.

When this Congress began to adjust the affairs of the Nation it found that certain foreign countries owed us something like $11,000,000,000 in war-time loans without our having very much in the way of signed contracts for payment to show for it. An act has been passed by this Congress creating a debt commission to look into these vast loans and to arrange for their refunding or payment. I want to say that I think the Congress has no idea of canceling this debt but will endeavor to see that it is put in businesslike shape.

The country has heard much of the frauds and grafts growing out of war contracts. The Congress has appropriated the sum of $500,000 to enable the Attorney General to prosecute those guilty of frauds and to enable him to collect as far as possible from those who still have their ill-gotten gains.

Already a number of prominent individuals have been indicted and suits are being prepared and filed for the recovery of large sums of money.

The Federal highways have been taken care of in the Post Office appropriation bill by the appropriation of $50,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, $65,000,000 for 1924, and $75,000,000 for 1925. Six million five hundred thousand dollars was also authorized for roads through the national forests for each of the fiscal years of 1924 and 1925. This item is of especial interest to Colorado.

The maternity and infancy act of interest to women everywhere was passed and the organization of this great work is under way. The act provides an appropriation of about $1,500,000 for this year, which may be increased $1,000,000 each year for five years. The States benefited in the work must join in about equal expenditures of money.

Immigration has been greatly limited by a restrictive measure passed by this Congress.

The naval scrapping act was made possible by the success of the conference on limitation of armament. The act authorizes the President to scrap a portion of the ships under construction and will save the country a great sum of money.

A bill was passed providing for the monthly payment of pensions to pensioners of all wars. This will be greatly appreciated by these old veterans who get none too much and need the money for their living expenses monthly.

The Volstead antibeer act is just another nail in the coffin of old John Barleycorn. It is designed to aid in the better enforcement of the prohibition amendment and laws.

Now these are not all the acts passed by this Congress by any means. But they are the ones of chief interest to the West.

Surely this is a notable record for any Congress and one that every Member of the Sixty-seventh Congress may well feel proud.

Speaking of the work of this Congress, Hon. FRANK W. MONDELL, majority leader, said in the House the other day:

"What I really rose to say, Mr. Speaker, was that no Congress ever sat under this Dome that was more faithful, diligent, painstaking, earnest, more intelligent or sounder in its judgments and decisions that the present Congress. Never in the same length of time has so much important legislation been considered in committee and in the Halls of the two branches of the National Legislature. Never in the history of this House has there been so close a study and painstaking an application to the work of the people in the matter of legislation and appropriations. Never has a Congress maintained a finer record for economy in expenditures than has this Congress, and gentlemen may go home to their constituents assured that their record and the record of the Congress of which they are Members will be approved by the overwhelming majority of the American people."

And I believe that every stockholder in this gigantic business enterprise—the United States of America—who is not overinfluenced by party considerations and political motives will agree with him.

It must be apparent to all fair-minded stockholders—the voters, in fact—that this has been a businesslike management of their concern, the Government of the United States.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. W. FRANK JAMES,

OF MICHIGAN,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, August 24, 1922.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, as has been well said:

Chaos reigns in the coal industry. The coal operators are the authors of this chaos. The coal operators revel in this chaos and have no thought of ending it.

The coal profiteers are running amuck. For many years their course has been marked by a want of humanity, of decency, and of good common sense.

We all know that the coal industry is deathly sick with a dangerous disease.

The disease comes from the fact of the lack of heart and the lack of head that has always marked the gross mismanagement of the coal industry by the coal operators.

The first step to cure the disease is the creation of a permanent Government fact-finding agency in the coal industry, endowed with full power to get all the facts and to publish all the facts.

After Congress gets all the facts then we can—and must—do the rest.

ESCH-CUMMINS BILL.

I am glad to say that I was one of the small minority of Republicans in the House that voted against the Esch bill when it passed the House in November, 1919, and the Esch-Cummins bill when it came back to the House in February, 1920.

I am also glad to say that I voted for the so-called Anderson antistrike amendment.

If the bill can not be repealed—and it looks as if it can not—then I am in favor of very substantial amendments to the act, because it violates many fundamental principles of proper legislation.

Under the provisions of the act:

Congress is directed to group the railroads into particular groups and promulgate such rates as to enable the railroads in the group to pay a fair return on the fair value of their property; that is, the object of the act is to insure the railroads a fixed percentage on their value as a return, whether the shipper or the traveler has any return or not.

Under the bill the basis of rates is the financial necessities of the railroads—that is, safety to railroad investment.

Prior to the passage of the Esch-Cummins Act the basis of railroad rates was justice between the shipper and the carrier.

Under the old way excessive rates could not be collected from some in order that cheaper rates might be furnished to others.

The exaction and maintenance of rates substantially and unreasonably in excess of what is compensatory is confiscatory, even though it has been approved by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Under the old law no State rate which was just alike to the shipper and to the railroad could be interfered with. At the present time the State may fix a rate which may be just alike to the shipper and to the railroad, but the Interstate Commerce Commission may set this rate aside and "impose a rate substantially and unreasonably in excess of what is compensatory in order to provide a fixed percentage of income for carriers who perform no part of this particular service."

Under the Esch-Cummins Act the shipping public and the traveling public are deprived of their property without just compensation to sustain the value of railroad securities of railroads which in some cases ought never to have been built.

Although agricultural products now bring only about 40 per cent of what they brought when this law was enacted, no substantial reductions have been made in railroad rates.

Unless a farmer happens to be located near a large market he is unable to operate at a profit.

As has been well said:

Farms are being sold at mortgage foreclosure sale, while the Interstate Commerce Commission, who arbitrarily raised rates 40 per cent on a flat percentage basis after they had been raised 5 per cent, 15 per cent, and 25 per cent, is conspicuous principally by furnishing data for propaganda used by the security holders and railroad executives.

Railroads have sought to curtail expenses and increase their net earnings by setting back engineers to firemen, conductors to brakemen, laying off men, closing stations, discharging station agents and employing caretakers, seeking to abandon branch roads which of themselves do not pay (notwithstanding the income and operating expenses of these branch lines entered into the computation when the general scale was fixed); by closing machine shops and subletting car repair and machine shop work to private contractors, subletting bridge-maintenance work, and otherwise seeking to hold the benefits of the alleged wage increases by way of increased rates, and avoiding the rate agreements by reason of which the increased rates were granted.

This bill is the first piece of national legislation founded on injustice to the individual. It is the first attempt to authorize common carriers to charge rates substantially and unreasonably in excess of what is compensatory for the service that they render.

It is the first bill that I know of that declares that unreasonable rates are fair, and that injustice is equity.

ADJUSTED COMPENSATION.

I am glad to say that every member of the Michigan delegation in Congress voted for the adjusted compensation bill two years ago and every member voted for it this time. I hope that the Senate will pass the bill and that the President will sign it. If the President should veto it I am sure that every member of the Michigan delegation will vote to override the veto.

Many of us voted against the repeal of the excess-profits tax—amounting to about $400,000,000—because we thought that this money should be used for paying the adjusted compensation bill.

SALES TAX.

An effort was made to pay for the bonus with the sales tax. I am against the sales tax because it is levied on what a man must pay in order to clothe and feed his family instead of being levied on what he earns.

The following explains the stand that some of us took at the time that the matter was proposed:

JAMES FOR BONUS BUT AGAINST TAX—TWELFTH DISTRICT CONGRESSMAN ONE OF 23 OPPOSED TO LEVY ON SALES.

Congressman W. FRANK JAMES is one of the 23 Congressmen who have signed a letter addressed to their colleagues declaring themselves in favor of the soldier bonus bill but opposed to any manufacturers' or other sales tax to raise funds for the obligation. Under their signatures the 23 Congressmen have issued the following statement to their colleagues:

"We, the undersigned, who favor the soldiers' bonus bill, urge you not to consent to any manufacturers' or other sales tax as means of raising revenues for meeting this obligation. We believe the economies effected by this Congress in the ordinary governmental expenses, together with the very substantial reductions to be made in the appropriations for the Army and Navy as a result of the disarmament conference, will very nearly provide the money with which to meet the cash payments as contemplated under the provisions of H. R. 1. It is estimated that something more than $100,000,000 in addition to the above savings will be needed annually for the next two years to meet the bonus, after which the revenues will be made to meet all demands.

FAVOR CERTIFICATE PLAN.

"This $100,000,000 annually, or $200,000,000 if need be, can easily and readily be raised by the issuance of short-term certificates. You will recall that the Treasury Department, a short time ago, placed upon the market short-term certificates in the amount of $400,000,000, and the records disclose the subscriptions for this issue were approximately $1,200,000,000, or three times the amount of the issue. Neither during the time these certificates were sold nor since has there been the slightest indication of an adverse effect upon the money market, but instead it is since then the country has witnessed the greatest strides toward the return of normalcy. The report of the Comptroller of the Currency indicates a constantly increasing improvement in our financial affairs. Consequently we believe there is undue alarm as to the possible effects of an issue of short-term certificates in order to meet the demands of the bonus.

"The President believes the ex-soldier should be paid the cash bonus all at once and that it should not be spread over a number of payments. This would require an expenditure of $1,500,000,000 within the next two years. He suggests a general sales tax as a means of raising this sum. Clearly, if this amount of money is to be raised by this means in one year or two, the tax must be applied to everything, including the actual necessities of life.

CITE CANADIAN TAX.

"Just how this tax works out in fact is best exemplified by the Canadian sales tax as applied to sugar. In Canada sugar is produced under almost exactly the same conditions as in the United States. They produce beet sugar in large quantities, and cane sugar is imported from the Tropics and refined. The expense of these operations is on a standard with similar operations here. In January sugar was retailing at 10 cents per pound in Canada and 6 cents in the United States. The tax there is a semi 1¼ per cent turnover. The manufacturer or importer is taxed 1¼ per cent and the jobber 1¼ per cent; in all, 3 per cent. Three per cent on 6 cents, the price of sugar where the sales tax does not apply, is 1.8 mills 1.0018, and if the amount of the tax only was collected from the consumer, the Canadian would be paying 0.0618 per pound for his sugar instead of 10 cents. When the merchant sells 100 pounds of sugar and collects the tax thereon, he collects 18 cents for the treasury and $5.82 for himself, the jobber, and the wholesaler, or more than twenty-one times the amount of the tax. And yet certain people proclaim this a 'painless' tax.

WOULD BE CALAMITY.

"Ninety millions of our people whose income is below the income-tax level will pay 85 per cent of the revenue derived from a sales tax in addition to the billions which will go to the manufacturers, jobbers, and retailers as a result of such tax. Millions are out of employment and the farmers of the country are in dire straits. To add to their burdens would be a calamity.

"Wall Street is openly in favor of a sales tax, according to an afternoon paper. It is known that back of the propaganda with which the country has been flooded during the past two years are the strong manufacturers' organizations. If this tax was to be absorbed by the members of these organizations, would they be advocating it? We think not. We believe they recognize fully that a sales tax is an ideal method of further increasing profits.

"We wish also to call your attention to the fact that if a sales tax is placed upon the statute books for the purpose of raising funds for the bonus it is going to be but two years until the revenues raised in this manner can be no longer used for this purpose. The bonus will then have been paid. We believe that when this time comes it will be most difficult to repeal such a law, for the reason that every special and favored interest in the country will demand its retention, and also insist that the tax on wealth is further reduced. When this is accomplished the process of the shifting of the burden of taxation will be complete.

"We believe the sales tax to be fundamentally wrong, and that it will never be countenanced by the American people.

"If the Ways and Means Committee should report out a bill carrying this tax feature, and a special rule which in any way abrogates the right of any Member to offer amendments to the tax provision should be presented to the House, we earnestly ask that you vote against such a rule. If there is to be a tax provision in the bill, it is extremely important that there should be a full and free discussion as to what this provision shall do."

WAR-CONTRACT FRAUDS.

Congressman WOODRUFF, of Michigan, tried for months to get action by the Department of Justice to recover the hundreds of millions of dollars stolen from the people.

He was blocked in his attempts to have the matter investigated by Congress. I voted with him. My experience on the Muscle Shoals matter, as a member of the Military Affairs Committee, had convinced me that the United States had been robbed of hundreds of millions of dollars, and that we ought to compel the gougers to disgorge, and also see that they were sent to prison.

In commenting on this and other matters, Labor, in its special Michigan edition, said in part as follows:

Fortunately there were two men who dared to maintain the good old-time credit of the State. Their names are W. FRANK JAMES and ROY C. WOODRUFF. They should be renominated and reelected. Twelfth district, Congressman W. FRANK JAMES. It is hard to beat JAMES'S record. He is right on every issue.

THE LA FOLLETTE SEAMEN'S LAW.

I am against any bill that will cripple this very good law.

WINSLOW REFUNDING BILL.

If I had been present I would have voted against the bill the same as I did the Esch-Cummins bill, as I consider them in the same class, but was called away on account of the serious illness and death of my father, and did not vote on this bill or the farmers' relief bill that I favored and wished to vote for.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

It was thought that the Democratic candidate for President after his defeat by 7,000,000 would be rather sick of the League of Nations. I note, however, that he has given the people in Europe to understand that he is still for it and that he hopes that we will join.

I was one of the first men in Congress to come out against article 10 and the League of Nations. After I spent three months in Germany, France, Italy, Greece, and Serbia and other places I was more strongly convinced than ever that it was no place for us.

If we had been a member of the league we would have had to send hundreds of thousands of our boys to help Poland in her fight with Russia.

If we had been a member of the league to-day I, as a member of the Military Affairs Committee, would be busy on legislation to send boys over to Constantinople. As a Member of Congress I would have nothing to say whether or not we should declare war or enter a war—that would be decided for us by other nations. After they had decided that we should go and how many men we should send, then we would have only to decide whether we should try and raise by draft or by volunteers.

I am against anything that will take away from Congress the right to do what it considers best for the American people.

FOREIGN DEBTS.

I am not only against foreign entanglements, but I am in favor of the countries over there paying us what they owe us. I am not in favor of giving any commission the right to say on what terms they shall pay us. I think we are going far enough when we give them the right to negotiate. The President can negotiate treaties, but they have to be confirmed by the Senate. Any terms made by any debt-refunding commission should be submitted to Congress for its approval before the matter is closed.

BUDGET LAW.

One of the earliest measures enacted by the present Congress was the Budget law, which went into effect July 1, 1921. The progress already achieved will cause this law to stand out as one of the most important pieces of legislation that has passed Congress in the last 25 years. It definitely puts an end to "pork-barrel" legislation and is a successful barrier against wasteful expenditures.

A Sure Way to Raise the Money for Adjusted Compensation for Ex-Service People and to Promote Temperance.

SPEECH
OF
HON. JOHN PHILIP HILL,
OF MARYLAND,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Thursday, December 22, 1921.

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the President's message.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman from Tennessee allow me to yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL]? I yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, before I address the House I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War. Is there objection?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, is the gentleman going to insert as part of his remarks an argument in favor of a tax on light wines and beer in order to raise money for the soldiers?

Mr. HILL. I am.

Mr. WINGO. Is the gentleman also going to advocate a sales tax?

Mr. HILL. I do not know about that yet.

Mr. BARKLEY. The gentleman's views on the subject will be his own?

Mr. HILL. Be my own entirely.

Mr. BARKLEY. No objection, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HILL. How much more time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has two and a half minutes.

Mr. HILL. I hold in my hand an original set of the general orders of the American Expeditionary Forces. Some people are used to taking orders from the Anti-Saloon League, but I do not do so, and I prefer to refer to the orders of the American Expeditionary Forces rather than those of the Anti-Saloon League.

While the former were fighting in France the latter was attempting to take away from them their privilege of cheering the gloom of the French trenches by a little light wine and beer.

True temperance was exercised in the American Expeditionary Forces, and I desire to call attention to General Orders, No. 77, and Bulletin No. 10, allowing the use of light wine and beer, to show that the veterans of the World War will not oppose my proposal to pay their adjusted compensation from a tax on light wine and beer:

(General Orders, No. 77.)

HEADQUARTERS AMERICAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCES,
FRANCE, December 18, 1917.

INTEMPERANCE.

11. Commanding officers at all places where our troops may be located will confer with the local French authorities and use every endeavor to limit the lowest possible number of places where intoxicants are sold. It is desired that these authorities be assisted in locating nonlicensed resorts, which should be reported immediately to the proper authority for the necessary action.

12. Soldiers are forbidden either to buy or accept as gifts from inhabitants whisky, brandy, champagne, liquors, or other alcoholic beverages, other than light wines or beer. The gift or retail sale of these by inhabitants in the zone of the Army is forbidden by French law. Commanding officers will see that all drinking places where alcoholic liquors named above are sold are designated as "off limits" and the necessary means adopted to prevent soldiers visiting them.

By command of General Pershing:

JAMES G. HARBORD,
Brigadier General, Chief of Staff.

Official:
ROBERT C. DAVIS,
Adjutant General.

(General Orders, No. 213.)

GENERAL HEADQUARTERS AMERICAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCES,
France, November 22, 1918.

1. Alcoholism is at present receiving the earnest attention of the French Government. All efforts toward its suppression will be given full cooperation by American commanding officers. A recent circular of instructions issued by the French Minister of War states:

"The consumption of alcohol and alcoholic drink has now become a danger throughout the country which the Government must remedy by energetic measures because of its consequences to military discipline as well as to the public health. The necessity of taking stern measures to fight alcoholism has become an imperative duty."

2. French law provides many means of restricting and controlling the sale of alcoholic liquor. The active assistance of all commanding officers will be lent to the French authorities in the enforcement of these laws in so far as they relate to the American Expeditionary Forces. All places, whether regular drinking places or not, and all persons found to be furnishing prohibited drinks to American officers or soldiers, or serving them with drinks outside of the permitted hours, will be promptly reported to the nearest French military or civil authority, as may be most expedient. All cases of intoxication of members of the American Expeditionary Forces will be investigated immediately upon discovery with a view to ascertaining the place or person responsible for supplying the intoxicant, and prompt report thereof will be made to the French authorities.

3. French regulations formally prohibit the retailing of alcoholic or spirituous beverages to military persons of all ranks and to civilian employees of the Army. They permit only the sale of wine, beer, cider, pear cider, and hydromel. The French authorities likewise limit the time during which cafés, restaurants, and drinking places are open to military persons to certain hours. Observance of these rules will be strictly enforced as to all members of the American Expeditionary Forces and all persons under its jurisdiction.

4. Commanding officers will consult the local French military or civil authority upon the best means of cooperation in the suppression of this evil. Special effort will be made in the coastal region, where the French law permits more vigorous repressive action than elsewhere.

By command of General Pershing:

JAMES W. MCANDREW,
Chief of Staff.

Official:
ROBERT C. DAVIS,
Adjutant General.

The above orders permitting the use of light wines and beer drove out brandy and whisky from the American Expeditionary Forces and won the war. Of course, the best way to pay the bonus is a tax on these beverages, and it means temperance. [Applause.]

Economy in the Administration of the Government—Discontinuance of Certain Land Offices.

OF
HON. JOHN PHILIP HILL,
OF MARYLAND,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Wednesday, June 28, 1922.

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill (S. 3425) to continue certain land offices, and for other purposes.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, the matter of Federal economy in the Government service is one which has engaged a large part of the time of this Congress. We have saved enormous sums. The Committee on Appropriations, after mature consideration, made cuts in the expenses of the Interior Department in the Interior Department bill amounting to $128,000 with reference to these land offices which are now proposed to be restored.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I am sorry, but I must decline to yield because I have not the time. If this bill is passed it will largely restore those items. I am therefore against this expenditure. I have followed this debate very carefully and I know the efforts of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Mr. MADDEN, on behalf of a very good motto, which expresses my theory and which I have adopted as a "battle cry," More liberty, less taxes.

As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] remarked just now:

If this was a matter of good fellowship only it would be easy for us to agree, but this is a matter affecting the Treasury of the United States, and we have, after careful consideration and consultation with the men whose districts were affected in the House, decided that the economy included in the appropriation for the Interior Department was not only essential but necessary.

I agree with him and I am for this saving of $128,000 a year. [Applause.]

War Risk Insurance Act—A Nurse for the Disabled Ex-Service Person.

OF
HON. JOHN PHILIP HILL,
OF MARYLAND,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Tuesday, June 27, 1922.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, this is not a partisan matter. I am surprised to hear even one partisan matter interjected into it. The whole spirit of it is to take care of the disabled veterans irrespective of cost, and I feel sure that this very meritorious bill providing adequate care for disabled veterans in the matter of nurse attendance will pass.

We discussed this matter in the House when the Sweet bill was passed and this particular item failed to pass. I voted for it, and I hope it will go through to-day. To read the bill is enough.

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision (5) of section 302 of the war risk insurance act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(5) If the disabled person is so helpless as to be in constant need of a nurse or attendant, such additional sum shall be paid, but not exceeding $50 per month, as the director may deem reasonable."

If a disabled ex-soldier or sailor needs a permanent nurse he ought to have it, and I agree with the gentleman from New York, Colonel FISH, who introduced the bill.

I also agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Colonel WINSLOW, chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, who recommends the passage of the bill. What he quotes from the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau should ring clear to the hearts of us all:

This bill differs from the original act only in respect of changing the sum of $20 for nurse or attendant to the sum of $50.

Col. C. R. Forbes, Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, in a letter written by him as of the 3d of May, 1922, wrote as follows:

" • • • At the present time there are 195 ex-service beneficiaries blind in both eyes, 94 who have lost both legs, and 8 who have lost both arms. There are 336 beneficiaries requiring the attendance of a nurse who are given the $20 monthly allowance allowed under the law for this purpose. In addition to the cases as listed above, there are three ex-service men receiving benefits because of double total permanent disability. In each instance both arms have been amputated and in addition the claimants are totally blind. In addition to this, two of the claimants are suffering with defective hearing. It is interesting to note that all three of these men received their disability from the premature explosion of a hand grenade.

"As I understand, your proposed bill changes the present law only so far as the monthly allowance for a nurse is concerned, making the maximum allowance of $50 per month instead of $20. Under the proposed bill if all beneficiaries requiring the attendance of a nurse are given the maximum allowance of $50 per month, it will entail an additional expenditure of $10,080 per month."

In a previous communication Col. C. R. Forbes, Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, stated his attitude on this bill thus:

"From a humanitarian standpoint and also in view of the fact that the sum of $20 is entirely inadequate to pay for the services of a constant attendant, I am of the opinion that this measure is advisable and desirable."

I know we are all for this bill and that it will pass. [Applause.]

Further Indorsement of the Goldsborough Bill for Stabilization.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH,
OF MARYLAND,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Saturday, September 16, 1922.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, as stated by me to this House on August 16, since May 23 last, when I addressed the the House on the subject of stabilizing the purchasing power of money, farm organizations, labor organizations, and the highest financial authorities have written me indorsing the effort and emphasizing the necessity for such legislation. On August 16 I inserted as a part of my remarks a letter from former Vice President of the United States Thomas R. Marshall; a letter from the Hon. CLAUDE KITCHIN, for years a great national figure, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives during the Wilson administration, now the minority leader of this House, highly esteemed and much loved, as he is, by Democrats and Republicans alike; also indorsements from Roger W. Babson, president of Babson's Statistical Organization, Wellesley Hills, Mass., whose statistical work in the field of economics and whose analyses of business cycles are so well known and so important as to be found in most of the great business houses, banks, trust companies, and financial organizations throughout the country, and also in the smaller ones which can afford it; a letter from the American Chamber of Commerce in Berlin, Germany; and a letter from William T. Foster, director of the Pollak Foundation for Economic Research, together with his carefully worked-out views on the subject. Of course, it is not necessary to emphasize the fact that this legislation has no partisan complexion, and I believe this House will be interested in an editorial appearing in Wallace's Farmer, a paper owned by the Hon. Henry C. Wallace, United States Secretary of Agriculture, and his brother, on August 25, 1922; a letter from Mr. Byron W. Holt, manager of Goodbody & Co., one of the leading members of the New York Stock Exchange; and a letter from Dr. John R. Commons, professor of economics at the University of Wisconsin, approving the effort to secure stabilization and to achieve stabilization, and I am therefore inserting these various documents as a part of my remarks:

[Editorial in Wallace's Farmer, a paper owned by Hon. Henry C. Wallace, United States Secretary of Agriculture, and his brother.]

STABLE MONEY BILL.

It must be fully apparent now to everyone how terrific are the evils which follow in the train of alternating periods of inflation and deflation. Fully 90 per cent of the class warfare which is striking so directly at the foundation of our civilization is the result of inflation or deflation.

Our readers will remember that on several occasions we have expressed a favorable opinion concerning the Fisher stabilized dollar as a method of preventing the periods of inflation and deflation which alternately harm the farmer and the laboring man. They will be interested, therefore, in knowing that Congressman GOLDSBOROUGH, of Maryland, has introduced a bill providing for the inauguration of the Fisher stabilized dollar. While it is too much to expect that the bill will pass at this session of Congress, it is to be hoped that the hearings will educate many Congressmen as to the fundamental truth that it is the alternating periods of inflation and deflation which cause so many troubles concerning which they legislate so futilely.

While the gold standard is unquestionably the best standard of currency the world has ever had, it must certainly give way eventually to a more scientific method of measuring values. The Fisher stabilized dollar is a step in the right direction, and we trust our readers will write their Congressmen directing their attention to the Goldsborough bill on stabilizing the dollar.

NEW YORK, August 12, 1922.

Hon. T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I wish to thank you for a copy of your speech in Congress entitled "Stabilizing the purchasing power of money." I have read it with interest, and not only agree with nearly all that you say but strongly approve of what you say in regard to the necessity for stabilizing the purchasing power of money. If it is possible to stabilize money—and I think that it is—there is, with perhaps one or two exceptions, no more important subject for legislation than this one.

I agree with you that millions of people in this world are bleeding and starving to-day because of unstable monetary units. Civilization is decaying and may go down and out in Europe if the important nations there continue to print fiat money and do not soon adopt new and relatively stable money and currency systems. Unstable money is the curse of the world to-day. It encourages speculation and dishonesty and discourages honest effort. It is the great breeder of discontent and anarchy.

Inclosed is copy of Goodbody & Co.'s market letter of this week, which discusses the farmer problem and the danger of further deflation. However, unless Professor Fisher's or some other method of stabilization of the dollar is adopted, it seems to me reasonably certain that our price level will continue to decline for 5 or 10 years more.

Very truly yours,

BYRON W. HOLT.

THE UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN,
DEPARTMENT OF ECONOMICS,
Madison, August 22, 1922.

Hon. T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I recently received a copy of the bill introduced by you and your speech on the subject of stabilizing the dollar. I should like to write to you my very strongest indorsement of this measure, at least in principle, though I presume the details may be changed in working out the legislation.

I consider the matter of stabilizing the dollar the most important of our economic problems, especially in the matter of the relation of capital and labor. I believe it is safe to say that two-thirds of the strikes and labor unrest of the past hundred years in this country have been due to rising prices and falling prices. Could the dollar be stabilized so as to bring about a steady level of prices, I believe it would do more for preventing strikes and labor unrest than any other measure.

I should be glad indeed if your bill receives serious attention from the Congress.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN R. COMMONS.

Grain Futures Bill.

OF
HON. JOHN PHILIP HILL,
OF MARYLAND,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, June 26, 1922.

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11843) for the prevention of obstructions and burdens upon interstate commerce in grain, by regulating transactions on grain future exchanges, and for other purposes.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, lines 19 and 20, strike out the words "or carelessly."

Mr. HILL. This bill (H. R. 11843) for the "prevention and removal of obstructions and burdens upon interstate commerce in grain" is a subtle extension of the already too extensive interference of the Government in business. I am for the farmer.

My farmer forefathers fought at Bunker Hill and elsewhere to establish the Constitution under which this legislation is supposed to be authorized, but if they knew to-day the encroachment this bill makes on the rights of their States they would come back and fight it to-day.

My constituents to-day are not farmers, but they depend on farmers, and this bill is not for the best interests of the farmers.

I am for all possible aid to the agricultural interests, but this kind of legislation has already once been declared unconstitutional. This bill does two things. By the portions of the bill that have been read extraordinary powers are granted to the Secretary of Agriculture. By section 9 there is added to the Penal Code of the United States a new offense. It is a misdemeanor, punishable by not more than one year and by a fine of not more than $10,000, or both.

I hold in my hand the Penal Code of the United States, and I invite your attention to section 215, but first I will again read to you section 9 of the pending bill:

Sec. 9. That any person who shall violate the provisions of section 4 of this act, or who shall fail to evidence any contract mentioned in said section by a memorandum in writing as therein required, or who shall knowingly or carelessly deliver for transmission through the mails or in interstate commerce by telegraph, telephone, wireless, or other means of communication false, misleading, or inaccurate reports concerning crop or market information or conditions that affect or tend to affect the price of grain in interstate commerce, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both, together with the costs of prosecution.

Section 215 of the present code will accomplish all that is desired by section 9, and do it constitutionally. For five years as United States attorney for Maryland I studied and enforced section 215. The maximum penalty in section 215 is $1,000 and the maximum is five years. I have gone carefully through all this Penal Code, and I am more or less familiar with the penal laws of the United States. We have too many unenforcible laws already. I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill, What does the word "carelessly" mean in the Criminal Code?

Mr. TINCHER. In the first place, the crime is made a misdemeanor, so that it might not be necessary to prove criminal intent to convict a man of a misdemeanor to the same extent that it would be to convict a man of a felony. I do not think there is any merit in the gentleman's argument, and I do not think a man should be permitted to do this thing and then claim that he did it carelessly and thus avoid the penalty. If it were a crime that involved moral turpitude and felonious intent that would be different, but here is a misdemeanor defined, and I do not think it ought to be necessary, in order to obtain conviction, to prove the animo furandi.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman want to go on record that he does not consider that a violation of this act involves any moral turpitude?

Mr. TINCHER. I said a violation of this act does not involve a felonious intent, because the punishment in it is already defined as a misdemeanor.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman tell the House what is the difference between a felony and a misdemeanor?

Mr. TINCHER. Oh, yes.

Mr. HILL. What is it?

Mr. TINCHER. One is punishable by servitude and the other is simply a misdemeanor. For instance, the violators of the Volstead Act every day, perhaps, in Baltimore, are guilty only of a misdemeanor.

Mr. HILL. Oh, no; of a felony or of high treason, according to the gentleman and his friends.

Mr. TINCHER. No; not felony. If they were guilty of felony, then my friend from Baltimore would be prosecuted as an accessory before and after the fact. To commit any crime that would send you to a penal institution is a felony, where they can work you, and a misdemeanor is different. This is not a felony.

Mr. HILL. I am glad to hear the gentleman admit even that much. Under the Federal law a felony is anything that is punishable by confinement for over one year. Less than that is a "misdemeanor."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I want to know if we are going to conduct a night school here on law practice.

Mr. KNUTSON. We need some instruction, I think.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I object.

Protect the Elk of the Olympic National Forest—Slaughter of Elk for Teeth and Antlers Must Stop.

OF
HON. ALBERT JOHNSON, OF WASHINGTON,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, March 13, 1922.

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10730) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I desire to take a few moments to call the attention of the Members to the situation in connection with the Olympic elk in the great Olympic Forest Reserve.

The older Members will remember that during the first term of Theodore Roosevelt a great area covering the entire heart of the Olympic peninsula was set aside as a Federal monument for the protection of the elks there, and that brand of elk became known as Cervus rooseveltis. That monument had no care whatever. It was within the great forest reservation. These elks were left to care for themselves. At that time the herds were supposed to number from 12,000 to 14,000 animals. Two or three years ago, with the assistance of the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], Congress caused the monument to disappear and its area to be actually included in the area of the Olympic Forest Reserve.

About that time it was noticed that the elks had exhausted the feeding grounds high in the Olympic Mountains and were coming down toward civilization, where they were being killed by poachers, principally for the purpose of obtaining their teeth, to be sold as emblems for the great order of Elks. I make this address in the hope that I may reach each and every lodge of Elks in the United States, to urge them to take further steps for the cancellation of the use of elk teeth if they desire to keep alive in the United States a single specimen of that noble animal, the American elk.

I should like to have Members come down and look at these pictures which I am displaying on the bulletin board. I have here a little circular entitled "The crime of killing elks for their teeth." I ask Members to come down and look at the picture of this beautiful animal with his jaws pried open, his lips cut off, and his teeth knocked out, a five-point buck with his magnificent antlers in the velvet, and left to rot in the woods. Look at this other one—from 800 to 1,000 pounds of good meat left to rot in that forest reserve. Three years ago, at the time of a great snow, when the elks could not live in the high mountains, we had something like a count of the herd, and in my opinion within that time the herd has been reduced from 8,000 to probably less than 4,000 elks. Now, the great Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks have done what they could, without great publicity, to cut down the demand for elk teeth. Our

State of Washington has severe laws against the killing of elks illegally, but in that great forest reserve, consisting of over a million square acres of territory, the United States Government has but four rangers, four men to take care of a territory as big as a small New England State, to protect the elks, to protect the forest from fires, and to do the necessary work. The appropriations of Congress in the last several years for the general upkeep of that great forest reserve have averaged $14,000 a year, in addition to the statutory salaried positions, bringing the total appropriation up to about $30,000. If there is one forest reserve in the United States that brings a handsome return to the Federal Government it is the Olympic Forest Reserve, which contains the largest amount of standing timber in one compact body in the United States.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is calling attention to the slaughter of elks in the forest reserve in his State.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Of course, the control over game is entirely in the hands of the State.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The State has full and complete authority over game on the public lands as well as on private land. The Federal Government has no authority whatever except as the State may cede authority to the Federal Government.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am just coming to that point, and in connection with it I want to emphasize the fact that the citizens of western Washington, residing in the valleys adjacent to the Olympic National Forest, are doing all they can to put a stop to the vicious practice of slaughtering the noble Olympic elk. The pictures I am displaying here are furnished me by patriotic citizens of the city of Hoquiam, Wash., who are alive to the situation and are anxious that the Federal Government cooperate to the fullest extent with the State authorities to the end that such viciousness may be prevented. I have been in consultation with representatives of the Forest Service, who assure me that in so far as their authority exists they will continue to cooperate. But the vital thing, and that to which I desire to call the attention of this House, is that all Americans, and particularly the members of the great fraternal society, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, must realize that the protection of the Olympic elk herds is a matter of importance to all the people. The elk must not be permitted to go the way of the bison and the passenger pigeon. Future generations will not be sparing in criticism of us if we fail to do all that lies in our power to preserve the wild life that still remains in our forests. I want to commend the officials of the United States Forest Service, who are alive to the situation and who are doing what they can. I hope their recommendations for protective legislation will have the favorable attention of Congress.

OF
HON. ROYAL C. JOHNSON,
OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, October 2, 1922.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with permission granted by unanimous consent of the House to extend my remarks in the RECORD and print the so-called "slacker lists," I desire to call attention to a letter from The Adjutant General's office dated September 25, 1922.

It is my intention to insert these lists on the 5th day of each month until all of the names are printed. No good soldier will be injured by the publication of his name in these lists; but, on the contrary, if his military record is one to be proud of, the publication will only serve to call attention to that record. If by mistake the names of good soldiers have not been eliminated from the record, it will be my pleasure and duty to insert in the RECORD the facts in each individual case and to see that the facts are brought to the attention of the Secretary of War, who is as anxious as any soldier of the late war with Germany to have the records correct. Mistakes ought to be corrected while the men are living and while there is evidence to substantiate any valid claim as to service.

The letter is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, September 25, 1922.

Hon. ROYAL C. JOHNSON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. JOHNSON: I have the honor to transmit herewith for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of October 2, 1922, lists of alleged draft deserters, which lists were released by the War Department for publication between August 5 and September 4, 1922, both dates inclusive. A copy of the statement to be printed at the head of the lists is also herewith.

There is also transmitted herewith for insertion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a list of the names of registrants which have been removed from the lists of alleged draft deserters heretofore published in the RECORD, the reasons for such removals being set forth in the second paragraph of the statement which is to precede the lists in the RECORD.

Very respectfully,
ROBERT C. DAVIS,
The Adjutant General.

The following names have been removed from the lists of alleged draft deserters heretofore published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD since the publication of such names:

LOCAL BOARD FOR THE CITY OF GALVESTON, STATE OF TEXAS.

The men whose names appear below and who were under the jurisdiction of the local boards named, were, according to the public draft records, classified and reported by the draft authorities as deserters from the military service of the United States. The lists in which these names were originally included have been given at least one month's publicity.

The name of any man who, since the publication of the lists, has been found to have actually rendered service in either our own forces or in those of the Allies during the period between May 18, 1917, and November 11, 1918, is not included; nor is that of any man who, though he rendered no service during the period mentioned, has, since the publication of his name, been found to have been erroneously inducted or to have been erroneously certified as a deserter, nor that of any man who is known to be no longer living.

Every reasonable effort has been made by the War Department to eliminate from these lists names which, for any of the aforementioned reasons, should not appear thereon. Should it develop, however, that certain of the names listed below should, for any of these reasons, likewise be removed, notice to that effect will be published in each such case in a later issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SIXTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS THIRD SESSION.

SENATE.

MONDAY, November 20, 1922.

The third session of the Sixty-seventh Congress commenced this day at the Capitol in the city of Washington, in pursuance of the proclamation of the President of the United States of the 9th day of November, 1922.

Our Father, as we meet together in special session we humbly crave Thy blessing. Grant that every act may receive Thy help, and that in all the deliberations of these days nothing but good shall be the outcome of the discussions.

We would not forget the family that has been afflicted, and while we think of the sorrow in the absence here we humbly beseech Thee for abundant comfort. Thou God of all consolation to widow and children. Reveal Thyself to us along the path of life until the journey ends, to Thy glory. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Resolved, That the hour of daily meeting of the Senate be 12 o'clock meridian until otherwise ordered.

DEATH OF SENATOR THOMAS E. WATSON.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, it is my sad duty to announce the death of my colleague, Hon. THOMAS E. WATSON, which occurred on September 26 in Washington, D. C.

His death was caused by overwork in his feeble condition. Time and time again I had urged him not to work so hard and not to remain so closely confined in the Senate, but he felt it his duty to be here battling for the common people whom he loved so well. No man in my State had so many personal friends, whose devotion to him made them followers at all times, and the number was larger at his death than ever before. He was the author of several histories which are regarded the world over as authorities. While a Member of the House he was the author of the first bill providing an appropriation for rural free mail delivery.

I shall not enumerate to-day his great services, but at the proper time I shall ask the Senate to set apart a day for memorial services.

I now submit the following resolutions and ask for their adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions (S. Res. 360) were read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep regret and profound sorrow the announcement of the death of the Hon. THOMAS E. WATSON, late a Senator from the State of Georgia.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased Senator.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Senator the Senate do now adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions submitted by the Senator from Georgia.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to, and the Senate (at 12 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, November 21, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, November 20, 1922.

This being the day fixed by the proclamation of the President for the meeting of the third session of the Sixty-seventh Congress, the Members of the House of Representatives assembled in their Hall, and at 12 o'clock noon were called to order by the Speaker, Hon. FREDERICK H. GILLETT.

PRESIDENT'S PROCLAMATION.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the proclamation of the President.

The Clerk read as follows:

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA—A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas public interests require that the Congress of the United States should be convened in extra session at 12 o'clock noon on the 20th day of November, 1922, to receive such communication as may be made by the Executive:

Now, therefore, I, Warren G. Harding, President of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim and declare that an extraordinary occasion requires the Congress of the United States to convene in extra session at the Capitol in the city of Washington on the 20th day of November, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon, of which all persons who shall at that time be entitled to act as Members thereof are hereby required to take notice.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 9th day of November, in the year of our Lord 1922, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and forty-seventh.

[SEAL.] WARREN G. HARDING.

By the President:
CHARLES E. HUGHES,
Secretary of State.

PRAYER.

The SPEAKER. The Chaplain will offer prayer.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, in all the earth Thou art the King of kings and the Lord of lords. Glory be to Thee from everlasting to everlasting. From Thy throne of infinite wisdom look with great favor upon our country, upon our Christian institutions, upon our President, and give gracious protection and nurturing care to all our fellow citizens. The Lord be pleased to direct the deliberations of this assembly. Bless all with vigor of mind and strength of body, and keep us in the realm of Thy love and in the domain of Thy kingdom. In all councils may decisions rest upon truth and righteousness. Let all friendships be heightened and transfigured with Thee, all leisure be deepened into peace, and all uncertainty strengthened into hope. Shadow our families with Thy tender, loving care. Bless officers and pages and all others who serve. O may the joy of our lives be in the sunshine of Thy mercy breaking through the mystery of Thy providence. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I present the credentials of THOMAS F. BAYARD, Senator elect from the State of Delaware. I ask that his credentials may be read and that the oath of office may be administered to him.

The credentials were read, and ordered to be filed, as follows:

BY AUTHORITY OF THE STATE OF DELAWARE

To the President of the Senate of the United States:

Be it known, an election was held in the State of Delaware on Tuesday, the 7th day of November, in the year of our Lord 1922, that being the Tuesday next after the first Monday in said month, in pursuance of the Constitution of the United States and the laws of the State of Delaware, in that behalf, for the election of a Senator for the people of the said State in the Senate of the United States.

Whereas the official certificates or returns of the said election, held in the several counties of the said State, in due manner made out, signed, and executed, have been delivered to me according to the laws of the said State, by the superior court of the said counties; and having examined said returns and enumerated and ascertained the number of votes for each and every candidate or person voted for, for such Senator, I have found THOMAS F. WALTER F. GEORGE, very generously and very graciously has withheld his credentials in order that Mrs. FELTON may take the oath, and, as I said, I hope no Senator will object. This will not in any way prejudice Mr. GEORGE's claims to his seat in the Senate, to which the people of my State have elected him, and his credentials will be presented to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia will present the certificate of appointment.

Mr. HARRIS. It is in the possession of the Secretary of the Senate.

Thereupon the Senate, preceded by its Sergeant at Arms (David S. Barry) and by the President pro tempore and the Secretary (George A. Sanderson), proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The address of the President of the United States this day delivered at a joint meeting of the two Houses of Congress is as follows:

The PRESIDENT. Members of the Congress: Late last February I reported to you relative to the American merchant marine, and recommended legislation which the executive branch of the Government deemed essential to promote our merchant marine and with it our national welfare. Other problems were pressing and other questions pending, and for one reason or another, which need not be recited, the suggested legislation has not progressed beyond a favorable recommendation by the House committee. The committee has given the question a full and painstaking inquiry and study, and I hope that its favorable report speedily will be given the force of law.

It will be helpful in clearing the atmosphere if we start with the frank recognition of divided opinion and determined opposition. It is no new experience. Like proposals have divided the Congress on various previous occasions. Perhaps a more resolute hostility never was manifest before, and I am very sure the need for decisive action—decisive, favorable action—never was so urgent before.

We are not now dealing with a policy founded on theory; we have a problem which is one of grim actuality. We are facing insistent conditions, out of which will come either additional and staggering Government losses and national impotence on the seas, or else the unfurling of the flag on a great American merchant marine commensurate with our commercial importance, to serve as carrier of our cargoes in peace and meet the necessities of our defense in war. There is no thought here and now to magnify the relation of a merchant marine to our national defense. It is enough to recall that we entered the World War almost wholly dependent on our Allies for transportation by sea. We expended approximately three billions, feverishly, extravagantly, wastefully, and impractically. Out of our eagerness to make up for the omissions of peace and to meet the war emergency we builded and otherwise acquired the vast merchant fleet which the Government owns to-day.

In the simplest way I can say it, our immediate problem is not to build and support a merchant shipping, which I hold to be one of the highest and most worthy aspirations of any great people; our problem is to deal with what we now possess. Our problem is to relieve the Public Treasury of the drain it is already meeting. Let us omit particulars about the frenzied war-time building. Possibly we did full as well as could have been done in the anxious circumstances. Let us pass for the moment the vital relationship between a merchant marine and a commercially aspiring nation. Aye, let us suppose for a moment the absurdity that with one $3,000,000,000 experience, and with the incalculable costs in lives and treasure which may be chargeable to our inability promptly to apply our potency—which God forefend happening again—let us momentarily ignore all of these and turn to note the mere business problem, the practical question of dollars and cents with which we are confronted.

The war construction and the later completion of war contracts, where completion was believed to be the greater economy to the Public Treasury, left us approximately 18,200,000 gross tonnage in ships. The figures are nearer 12,500,000 tons now, owing to the scrapping of the wooden fleet. More than half this tonnage is Government owned, and approximately 2,250,000 tons are under Government operation in one form or another. The net loss to the United States Treasury—sums actually taken therefrom in this Government operation—averaged approximately $16,000,000 per month during the year prior to the assumption of responsibility by the present administration. A constant warfare on this loss of public funds, and the draft to service of capable business management and experienced operating directors, have resulted in applied efficiency and enforced economies. It is very gratifying to report the diminution of the losses to $4,000,000 per month, or a total of $50,000,000 a year; but it is intolerable that the Government should continue a policy from which so enormous a Treasury loss is the inevitable outcome. This loss, moreover, attends operation of less than a third of the Government-owned fleet.

It is not, therefore, a question of adding new Treasury burdens to maintain our shipping; we are paying these burdens now. It is not a question of contracting an outlay to support our merchant shipping, because we are paying already. I am not asking your authorization of a new and added draft on the Public Treasury; I am appealing for a program to diminish the burden we are already bearing.

When your executive government knows of public expenditures aggregating fifty millions annually, which it believes could be reduced by half through a change of policy, your government would be unworthy of public trust if such a change were not commended, nay, if it were not insistently urged.

And the pity of it is that our present expenditure in losses is not constructive. It looks to no future attainments. It is utterly ineffective in the establishment of a dependable merchant marine, whereas the encouragement of private ownership and the application of individual initiative would make for a permanent creation, ready and answerable at all times to the needs of the Nation.

But I have not properly portrayed all the current losses to the Public Treasury. We are wearing out our ships without any provision for replacement. We are having these losses through deterioration now, and are charging nothing against our capital account. But the losses are there, and regrettably larger under Government operation than under private control. Only a few years of continued losses on capital account will make these losses through depreciation alone to exceed the fifty millions a year now drawn to cover losses in operation.

The gloomy picture of losses does not end even there. Notwithstanding the known war cost of $3,000,000,000 for the present tonnage, I will not venture to appraise its cash value to-day. It may as well be confessed now as at some later time that in the mad rush to build, in establishing shipyards wherever men would organize to expend Government money, when we made shipbuilders overnight quite without regard to previous occupations or pursuits, we builded poorly, often very poorly. Moreover, we constructed without any formulated program for a merchant marine. The war emergency impelled, and the cry was for ships, any kind of ships. The error is recalled in regret rather than criticism. The point is that our fleet, costing approximately $3,000,000,000, is worth only a fraction of that cost to-day. Whatever that fraction may be, the truth remains that we have no market in which to sell the ships under our present policy, and a program of surrender and sacrifice and the liquidation which is inevitable unless the pending legislation is sanctioned, will cost scores of millions more.

When the question is asked, Why the insistence for the merchant marine act now? the answer is apparent. Waiving every inspiration which lies in a constructive plan for maintaining prudence in safeguarding against another $3,000,000,000 madness if war ever again impels, we have the unavoidable task of wiping out a $50,000,000 annual loss in operation, and losses aggregating many hundreds of millions in worn-out, sacrificed, or scrapped shipping. Then the supreme humiliation, the admission that the United States—our America, once eminent among the maritime nations of the world—is incapable of asserting itself in the peace triumphs on the seas of the world. It would seem to me doubly humiliating when we own the ships and fail in the genius and capacity to turn their prows toward the marts of the world.

This problem can not longer be ignored, its attempted solution can not longer be postponed. The failure of Congress to act decisively will be no less disastrous than adverse action.

Three courses of action are possible, and the choice among them is no longer to be avoided.

The first is constructive—enact the pending bill, under which, I firmly believe, an American merchant marine, privately owned and privately operated, but serving all the people and always available to the Government in any emergency, may be established and maintained.

The second is obstructive—continue Government operations and attending Government losses and discourage private enterprise by Government competition, under which losses are met by the Public Treasury, and witness the continued losses and deterioration until the colossal failure ends in sheer exhaustion.

The third is destructive—involving the sacrifice of our ships abroad or the scrapping of them at home, the surrender of our aspirations, and the confession of our impotence to the world in general and our humiliation before the competing world in particular.

A choice among the three is inevitable. It is unbelievable that the American people or the Congress which expresses their power will consent to surrender and destruction. It is equally unbelievable that our people and the Congress which translates their wishes into action will longer sustain a program of obstruction and attending losses to the Treasury.

I have come to urge the constructive alternative, to reassert an American "We will." I have come to ask you to relieve the responsible administrative branch of the Government from a program upon which failure and hopelessness and staggering losses are written for every page, and let us turn to a program of assured shipping to serve us in war and to give guaranty to our commercial independence in peace.

I know full well the hostility in the popular mind to the word "subsidy." It is stressed by the opposition and associated with "special privilege" by those who are unfailing advocates of Government aid whenever vast numbers are directly concerned. "Government aid" would be a fairer term than "subsidy" in defining what we are seeking to do for our merchant marine, and the interests are those of all the people, even though the aid goes to the few who serve.

If Government aid is a fair term—and I think it is—to apply to authorizations aggregating $75,000,000 to promote good roads for market highways, it is equally fit to be applied to the establishment and maintenance of American market highways on the salted seas. If Government aid is the proper designation for fifteen to forty millions annually expended to improve and maintain inland waterways in aid of commerce, it is a proper designation for a needed assistance to establish and maintain ocean highways where there is actual commerce to be carried.

But call it "subsidy," since there are those who prefer to appeal to mistaken prejudice rather than make frank and logical argument. We might so call the annual loss of fifty millions, which we are paying now without protest by those who most abhor, we might as well call that a "subsidy." If so, I am proposing to cut it in half, approximately, and to the saving thus effected there would be added millions upon millions of further savings through ending losses on capital account—Government capital, out of the Public Treasury, always remember—and there would be at least the promise and the prospect of the permanent establishment of the needed merchant marine.

I challenge every insinuation of favored interests and the enrichment of the special few at the expense of the Public Treasury. I am, first of all, appealing to save the Treasury. Perhaps the unlimited bestowal of Government aid might justify the apprehension of special favoring, but the pending bill, the first ever proposed which carries such a provision, automatically guards against enrichment or perpetuated bestowal. It provides that shipping lines receiving Government aid must have their actual investment and their operating expenses audited by the Government, that Government aid will only be paid until the shipping enterprise earns 10 per cent on actual capital employed, and immediately that when more than 10 per cent earning is reached half of the excess earnings must be applied to the repayment of the Government aid which has been previously advanced. Thus the possible earnings are limited to a very reasonable amount if capital is to be risked and management is to be attracted. If success attends, as we hope it will, the Government outlay is returned, the inspiration of opportunity to earn remains, and American transportation by sea is established.

Though differing in detail, it is not more in proportion to their population and capacity than other great nations have done in aiding the establishment of their merchant marines, and it is timely to recall that we gave them our commerce to aid in their upbuilding, while the American task now is to upbuild and establish in the face of their most active competition. Indeed, the American development will have to overcome every obstacle which may be put in our path, except as international comity forbids. Concern about our policy is not limited to our own domain, though the interest abroad is of very differing character. I hope it is seemly to say it, because it must be said, the maritime nations of the world are in complete accord with the opposition here to the pending measure. They have a perfect right to such an attitude. When we look from their viewpoints we can understand. But I wish to stress the American viewpoint. Ours should be the viewpoint from which one sees American carriers at sea, the dependence of American commerce, and American vessels for American reliance in the event of war. Some of the costly lessons of war must be learned again and again, but our shipping lesson in the World War was much too costly to be effaced from the memory of this or future generations.

Not so many months ago the head of a company operating a fleet of ships under our flag called at the Executive Offices to discuss a permit to transfer his fleet of cargo vessels to a foreign flag, though he meant to continue them in a distinctly American service. He based his request for transfer on the allegation that by such a transfer he could reduce his labor costs alone sufficiently to provide a profit on capital invested. I do not vouch for the accuracy of the statement nor mean to discuss it. The allusion is made to recall that in good conscience Congress has created by law conditions surrounding labor on American ships which shipping men the world over declare result in higher costs of operation under our flag. I frankly rejoice if higher standards for labor on American ships have been established. Merest justice suggests that when Congress fixes these standards it is fair to extend Government aid in maintaining them until world competition is brought to the same high level, or until our shipping lines are so firmly established that they can face world competition alone.

Having discussed in detail the policy and provisions of the pending bill when previously addressing you, I forbear a repetition now. In individual exchanges of opinion not a few in House or Senate have expressed personal sympathy with the purposes of the bill and then uttered a discouraging doubt about the sentiment of their constituencies. It would be most discouraging if a measure of such transcending national importance must have its fate depend on geographical, occupational, professional, or partisan objections. Frankly, I think it loftier statesmanship to support and commend a policy designed to effect the larger good to the Nation than merely to record the too hasty impressions of a constituency. Out of the harmonized aspirations, the fully informed convictions, and the united efforts of all the people will come the greater Republic. Commercial eminence on the seas, ample agencies for the promotion and carrying of our foreign commerce, are of no less importance to the people of Mississippi and the Missouri Valley, the great Northwest, and the Rocky Mountain States than to the seaboard States and industrial communities building inland a thousand miles or more. It is a common cause, with its benefits commonly shared. When people fall in the national viewpoint, and live in the confines of community selfishness or narrowness, the sun of this Republic will have passed its meridian, and our larger aspirations will shrivel in the approaching twilight.

But let us momentarily put aside the aspiring and inspiring viewpoint. The blunt, indisputable fact of the loss of fifty millions a year under Government operation remains; likewise the fast diminishing capital account, the enormous war expenditure, to which we were forced because we had not fittingly encouraged and builded as our commerce expanded in peace. Here are facts to deal with, not fancies wrought out of our political and economic disputes. The abolition of the annual loss and the best salvage of the capital account are of concern to all the people.

It is my firm belief that the combined savings of operating losses and the protection of the capital account through more advantageous sales of our war-built or war-seized ships, because of the favoring policy which the pending bill will establish, will more than pay every dollar expended in Government aid for 25 years to come.

It should be kept in mind that the approximate sum of five millions annually paid for the transport of ocean mails is no new expenditure. It should be kept in mind that the loan fund to encourage building is not new; it is the law already enacted by the essential unanimous vote of Congress. It is only included in the pending bill in order to amend so as to assure the exaction of a minimum interest rate by the Government, whereas the existing law leaves the grant of building loans subject to any whim of favoritism.

It should be kept in mind, also, that there are assured limitations of the Government aid proposed. The direct aid, with ocean carrying maintained at our present participation, will not reach twenty millions a year, and the maximum direct aid, if our shipping is so promoted that we carry one-half our deep-seas commerce, will not exceed thirty millions annually. At the very maximum of outlay we should be saving twenty millions of our present annual operating loss. If the maximum is ever reached, the establishment of our merchant marine will have been definitely recorded and the Government-owned fleet fortunately liquidated.

From this point of view it is the simple, incontestable wisdom of businesslike dealing to save all that is possible of the annual loss and avoid the millions sure to be lost to the Government's capital account in sacrificing our fleet. But there is a bigger, broader, more inspiring viewpoint, aye, a patriotic viewpoint. I refer to the constructive action of to-day, which offers the only dependable promise of making our war-time inheritance of ships the foundation of a great agency of commerce in peace and an added guaranty of service when it is necessary to our national defense.

Thus far I have been urging Government aid to American shipping, having in mind every interest of our producing population, whether of mine, factory, or farm, because expanding commerce is the foremost thought of every nation in the world to-day.

I believe in Government aid becomingly bestowed. We have aided industry through our tariffs; we have aided railway transportation in land grants and loans. We have aided the construction of market roads and the improvement of inland waterways. We have aided reclamation and irrigation and the development of water powers; we have loaned for seed grains in anticipation of harvests. We expend millions in investigation and experimentation to promote a common benefit, though a limited few are the direct beneficiaries. We have loaned hundreds of millions to promote the marketing of American goods. It has all been commendable and highly worth while.

At the present moment the American farmer is the chief sufferer from the cruel readjustments which follow war's inflations, and befitting Government aid to our farmers is highly essential to our national welfare. No people may safely boast a good fortune which the farmer does not share.

Already this Congress and the administrative branch of the Government have given willing ear to the agricultural plea for postwar relief, and much has been done which has proven helpful. Admittedly, it is not enough. Our credit systems, under Government provision and control, must be promptly and safely broadened to relieve our agricultural distress.

To this problem and such others of pressing importance as reasonably may be dealt with in the short session I shall invite your attention at an early date.

I have chosen to confine myself to the specific problem of dealing with our merchant marine because I have asked you to assemble two weeks in advance of the regularly appointed time to expedite its consideration. The executive branch of the Government would feel itself remiss to contemplate our yearly loss and attending failure to accomplish if the conditions were not pressed for your decision. More, I would feel myself lacking in concern for America's future if I failed to stress the beckoning opportunity to equip the United States to assume a befitting place among the nations of the world whose commerce is inseparable from the good fortunes to which rightfully all peoples aspire.

The Senate returned to its Chamber at 1 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m., and the President pro tempore resumed the chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

SWEARING IN OF SENATORS.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, with the consent of the Senator from Montana, I ask that the three Senators whose credentials, which will lead to no discussion whatever, have been presented and who are waiting here to take the oath may be permitted now to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senators from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Delaware will present themselves at the desk.

Mr. PEPPER and Mr. REED of Pennsylvania, escorted by Mr. LODGE, and Mr. BAYARD, escorted by Mr. BALL, advanced to the Vice President's desk, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to them, they took their seats in the Senate.

PUEBLO INDIAN LANDS IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana indulge me for just a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to call attention to the bill (S. 3855) to ascertain and settle land claims of persons not Indian within pueblo Indian land, land grants, and reservations in the State of New Mexico, which passed the Senate in the closing days of the session, and which, I think, passed the Senate under a misapprehension as to what its terms are. I ask unanimous consent that the House be requested to return the bill to the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator state what is the purpose of the bill?

Mr. BORAH. The bill relates to certain Indian lands in New Mexico.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Idaho that the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate Senate bill 3855? The Chair hears no objection, and the order is entered.

SENATOR FROM GEORGIA.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think we ought to dispose of the matter which is before the Senate at this time.

Mr. HARRELD. I merely wanted to introduce a bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I shall have to object to further interruption until the pending matter shall have been disposed of.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana kindly yield in order that I may introduce a bill? It will take but a moment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; I object to the transaction of any business whatever until the pending matter shall have been disposed of. It is a question of high privilege.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana is entitled to the floor and will proceed.

Mr. WALSH of Montana resumed and concluded his speech, which is entire as follows:

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I am very sure there is no Member of the Senate who does not desire to accord to this estimable and worthy woman the high honor of sitting even for a brief period as a Member of this body, if he can do so consistently with his sense of duty. It would do very little credit, however, to this body or to her to admit her to membership if the Constitution, which we have all sworn to support by the oath she must subscribe, forbids it. As very grave doubt has been cast upon her present right to take the oath by the public statement of the governor of her State, I venture to submit for the consideration of the Senate some reflections upon the subject as well as some precedents in relation to it.

As the Senate has been advised, upon the death of the late Senator WATSON, Mrs. FELTON was appointed pursuant to the amendment to the Constitution and the laws of Georgia to fill the vacancy until the next election should take place. Writs of election were issued in that State in accordance with the amendment to the Constitution, and an election was held on the 7th day of November, as the result of which, as we have been advised unofficially by the public press, Mr. GEORGE was elected to fill the vacancy. Similarly we are advised that the board of canvassers of the State met, discharged their duties in the premises, and there was issued to him a certificate of election. Of these facts I understand there is no dispute.

The relevant provision of the Constitution is clause 2 of the seventeenth amendment, which reads as follows:

When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, That the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointment until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct.

The question is presented as to what is meant by an election as there used. Was the election accomplished when the voters deposited their ballots in the ballot box upon the 7th day of November last, or were the subsequent proceedings, the returns of the result, the canvassing of the returns, the certification of the result, and the issuing of a certificate, a part of the election? Was the election complete only when these things were done, or did it take place and become complete on the 7th day of November?

Further, the question is presented whether, even if the election was complete at that time, the sitting Member has not the right to sit until the credentials of her successor are presented to the Senate.

If it be true that the election took place and was complete upon the 7th day of November, it may be that the term of Mrs. FELTON expired on that day, although her successor might not until some time thereafter, namely, after the canvassing board had completed its work and a certificate of election had been delivered him, be in a situation to establish his title to the place. If that view is to obtain, there would then be a hiatus, an interim, during which the State would have but one representative in the Senate.

It has been contended, and I think with some degree of force, that the certificate is not absolutely essential to permit the admission of the Member. Members of the House are frequently sworn in without the presentation of certificates of their election, and oftentimes before the canvass has occurred. On yesterday several Members of the House were admitted to membership without the presentation of the official evidence of their election, either because the certificate had been delayed in transmission or because the canvass had not been completed. It could easily be conceived that the proper officers might willfully withhold the certificate, in which case the Senate would undoubtedly receive extraneous evidence to establish the fact of the election.

Moreover, it is maintained, upon reason as well as authority, that the Senate and House will take judicial notice of the fact that an election took place and of who was elected thereat. Courts take judicial notice of notorious facts of history. It would not be necessary, for instance, to establish by proof that the Battle of Gettysburg took place on the 1st, 2d, and 3d days of July, 1863. The court knows that as a matter of history. So as a matter of current history it is not improbable that we would take notice that Mr. BROOKHART, from the State of Iowa, and Mr. GEORGE, from the State of Georgia, were elected Members of this body at the late election. The Supreme Court of the United States quotes with apparent approval a paragraph from Greenfield on Evidence supporting this view. In a case in the State of North Dakota the court took judicial notice of the fact that certain gentlemen were elected members of the supreme court itself, the board of canvassers not yet having completed their work or certified the result as to the judgeships in question.

Important consequences necessarily follow from the adoption of either the one or the other view, namely, that the election was complete on the 7th of November or only after the canvassing board had declared the result. If, for instance, Senator GEORGE had died on the 8th day of November and before the canvassing board had completed its work, the question would arise as to whether Mrs. FELTON continued to be a Senator from Georgia until a new election should be held to fill the vacancy or whether her term of office having expired at midnight on the 7th of November the Governor of Georgia was entitled to appoint another person until the vacancy should be filled by election.

The question as to who should draw the salary, not only of the Senator, but of the clerks of the Senator, also becomes a matter of considerable importance. That feature of it was presented for consideration to the late Vice President Marshall, who ruled that the right of the appointee of the governor to the office, at least so far as the salaries of the clerks were concerned, expired on the night of the election. His views about the matter were expressed in a letter directed to the financial secretary of the Senate under date of October 15, 1918, which I ask be read at the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

THE VICE PRESIDENT'S CHAMBER,
Washington, October 15, 1918.

MY DEAR MR. PAGE: In response to your inquiry as to the tenure of office of temporary appointment of Senators by the governors of the several States, I have the honor to give you the following opinion:

The supreme law of the land upon this question is the seventeenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Neither Congress nor the general assembly of any State of this Union can add to or take therefrom. The portion of the seventeenth amendment which has to do with this question reads as follows:

"When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, That the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct."

To my mind this clause authorizes the legislature of any State to empower the executive to make a temporary appointment until an election; that the legislature could either provide for a special election to take place within a reasonable time, or a fair construction of the constitutional provision would permit the legislature to delay the election until the next general election in the State.

It may be contended with some plausibility that the election might be postponed until the expiration of the term of the Senator whose death occasioned the temporary appointment. Personally, I do not so believe, nor is it needful under present circumstances to express an opinion upon this subject.

The tenure of office of those holding temporary appointments in the United States runs until the people have filled the vacancies by election as the legislatures may direct. In all cases now under consideration the people will vote for United States Senators to fill the vacancies now being filled by these temporary appointments upon the 5th day of November next. The sole question for determination is, therefore, What constitutes an election?

The phraseology of the Constitution of the United States is radically different from that of many of the Commonwealths. Numerous State constitutions provide a tenure of office and then add that the incumbent shall hold the office for that period of time and until his successor is elected and qualified. In the seventeenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States nothing is said about holding beyond the election.

In the absence of disqualification to hold office, Senators will be elected on the 5th day of November next. They may be compelled to run the gamut of executive, administrative, judicial, and senatorial investigation before they are entitled to qualify and take their seats as Members of the United States Senate. They may fail to even reach the coveted positions. Equitably, it would seem that the present incumbents ought to be permitted to hold until the successors elected on the 5th of November have been sworn in as Senators of the United States. Such, however, is not the law. The tenure of office of all Senators now holding temporary appointments in the Senate of the United States will expire upon the 5th day of November next, and in the discharge of my sworn duty I can certify no compensation after that date.

I regret being compelled to render this opinion, but I think my duty as plain as a pikestaff.

Very respectfully,

THOS. R. MARSHALL.

Financial Secretary United States Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The conclusion arrived at by the late Vice President, as expressed in the letter just read, concerning the significance of the word "election" as used in the constitutional amendment, is in accordance with the common understanding in relation thereto. As the term is ordinarily employed it undoubtedly means the day upon which the ballots are cast—in this particular instance the 7th day of November. It was given that significance by the Supreme Court of the State of Alabama in the case of State ex rel. Tucker v. Harris (54 Ala. 203). A statute of that State declared the office of sheriff to be vacant unless the sheriff gave a bond within 15 days after the election. In that case the votes were not canvassed within that period, but it was held, notwithstanding, that the office became vacant if the sheriff did not give a bond within 15 days after the day on which the ballots were cast. That view is in accordance also with the form prescribed by the certificate of appointment of a Senator prepared by the Senate for the information of the executives of the various States after the adoption of the amendment, a copy of which is found on page 9 of the Book of Rules of the Senate. It reads as follows:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Senate the following are convenient and sufficient forms of certificate of election of a Senator or the appointment of a Senator, to be signed by the executive of any State in pursuance of the Constitution and the statutes of the United States:

"To the President of the Senate of the United States:

"This is to certify that on the — day of ———, 19—, A——— B——— was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of ——— a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years, beginning on the 4th day of March, 19—.

"Witness: His excellency our governor ———, and our seal hereto affixed at ——— this — day of ———, in the year of our Lord 19—.

"By the governor:

"C——— D———,
"Governor.

"E——— F———,
"Secretary of State."

The date inserted undoubtedly would be, and I believe has uniformly been, the day on which the ballots were cast and not the day upon which the returns were eventually canvassed.

But, Mr. President, while I have the very highest respect for the opinion of the late Vice President upon a subject like this, and we all know that his views upon similar questions were characterized by saving good sense, it is quite evident that he passed upon the question without consideration of the precedents of the Senate, which seem to me all important, indeed controlling. Those, Mr. President, are unbroken to the effect that the appointee of the governor is entitled to sit until his successor, elected by the legislature under the old Constitution, presents himself at the bar of the Senate and claims his seat or, at least, until the credentials of his successor are in some other way presented to the Senate. The provision of the original Constitution was quite ambiguous as to the time when the right of the appointee ceased. It read as follows:

And if vacancies happen by resignation, or otherwise, during the recess of the legislature of any State, the executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies.

It was contended for a long time that by the plain language of the Constitution an appointee of the governor held his office only until the day on which the legislature of the State assembled. It was stoutly maintained that at least as soon as the legislature elected a Senator the right of the governor's appointee ceased. Finally it was contended that the right of the appointee did not cease until the person elected by the legislature presented his credentials; and the action of the Senate from the very beginning, Mr. President, has been in accordance with that theory. In connection with a report of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate made in the year 1851, a long list of cases, dating from the beginning of our Government, was given, showing that to have been the uniform practice and course of the Senate. Thus:

Thomas Posey, of Louisiana, appointed by the governor October 8, 1812, appeared and was classed November 27, 1812, qualified December 7, 1812, and took his seat, which he held until his successor, Mr. James Brown, elected by the legislature, appeared. Mr. Brown was elected December 1, 1812, and took his seat in the Senate February 5, 1813.

The appointee in that case held from December 1, 1812, when his successor was elected, until February 5, 1813, when the Senator elected by the legislature appeared.

Cristopher Gore, of Massachusetts, appointed by the governor May 5, 1813, took his seat May 28, 1813, and held until his successor, himself, appeared and qualified. Mr. Gore's credentials were presented June 4, 1813.

In that case the appointee of the governor held after his successor was elected from May 28, 1813, to June 4, 1813.

Jesse Wharton, of Tennessee, appointed by the governor March 17, 1814, took his seat April 9, 1814, and held until his successor, John Williams, appeared and qualified. Mr. Williams was elected by the legislature October 10, 1815, and appeared December 4, 1815.

As will be observed, there was a lapse of nearly 60 days; that is to say, the appointee of the governor served almost 60 days after his successor had been elected by the legislature.

The report from which I have quoted, Mr. President, was made in connection with a somewhat historic case. It arose by reason of the resignation of Daniel Webster in 1850. The facts are recited briefly in the syllabus of the case reported in Senate Election Cases, as follows:

Mr. Winthrop was appointed July 27, 1850, to fill a vacancy happening in the Senate by the resignation of Daniel Webster. February 1, 1851, Robert Rantoul was elected by the legislature to fill the unexpired term. February 4, Mr. Rantoul not having appeared to take the seat—

It will be observed that he had been elected February 1—

Mr. Winthrop offered a resolution, which was agreed to, "that the Committee on the Judiciary inquire and report to the Senate, as early as practicable, at what period the term of service of a Senator appointed by the executive of a State during the recess of the legislature thereof rightfully expires." The committee reported "that a person so appointed had a right to the seat until the legislature, at its next meeting, should elect a person to fill the unexpired term, and the person elected should accept, and his acceptance appear to the Senate; that presentation of credentials implied acceptance; that these views were sustained by precedents." The report was debated, but no action taken, the whole subject being laid on the table. Mr. Winthrop vacated the seat February 7, 1851, when Mr. Rantoul's credentials were presented.

Mr. President, it will be noted that if, as I have heretofore observed, the right of the appointee terminates on the day of the election—that is to say, on the day on which the votes are cast—there must, under any circumstances whatever, result a hiatus between that time and the time when his or her successor takes his seat. If he does not take his seat until a certificate is issued to him after the canvassing board has done its work, the period will be considerable in many instances, the State meanwhile being unrepresented; but if, indeed, we may take judicial notice of the election, without the necessity of a formal certificate of election, from such information as we can secure, still there must be a hiatus. That is to say, the result can not be determined until the night of the election, ordinarily; and though the Member proceeds at once to the Capital from a remote section of the country—California, or the State of Washington—at least four days must ensue until the successor of the governor's appointee can arrive to take his place, the State meanwhile being unrepresented. From my State a period of three days would elapse. We must consider these provisions in view of the conditions which obtained at the time the Constitution was adopted, when sometimes it took a week or two weeks to travel from distant States to the Capital.

It is said as a principle of physics that nature abhors a vacuum, and it is undoubtedly true that the law abhors a vacancy. The most liberal construction will, accordingly, be given to any statute or to any constitution so that there shall be no vacancy, so that the appointee or Member elect shall take his seat as his predecessor vacates it.

The views of the committee to which reference has been made and which considered the subject over 70 years ago are expressed in brief in its report. Its reasoning will doubtless be of interest to the Members who have followed the discussion. From that report I read:

The question presented by the resolution turns mainly upon the construction of the clause of Article I, section 2, of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that "if vacancies happen, by resignation or otherwise, during the recess of the legislature of any State, the executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the legislature, which shall fill such vacancies."

Your committee are of the opinion that the sitting Member under executive appointment has a right to occupy his seat until the vacancy shall be filled by the legislature of the State of which he is a Senator during the next meeting thereof. To fill such vacancy it is not only necessary to make an election, but that the person elected shall accept the appointment. And your committee are further of the opinion that such acceptance should appear by the presentation to the Senate of the credentials of the Member elect, or other official information of the fact, at which time the office of the sitting Member terminates. When the Member elect is present and ready to qualify his express acceptance is at once made known; and when his credentials are presented in his absence his acceptance may be fairly implied.

The report, Mr. President, gave rise to an extended discussion before the Senate. I shall not trouble the Senate with any extended reference to it; but I call your attention to the various propositions which were debated, as expressed by Mr. Bradbury, a Senator from the State of Maine and a member of the committee, who in the course of some remarks said:

Three distinct positions have been taken and are presented in the propositions that have been discussed, as to the time when the office of a person holding under executive appointment, to fill a vacancy in the Senate happening by resignation or otherwise during the recess of the legislature of any State terminates.

The first is that it terminates on the first day of the next meeting of the legislature of such State. This is the position of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. RHETT] and is intended to be presented by his amendment to the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAVIS].

The second is that such office terminates upon the presentation to the Senate, during the next session of such legislature, of the credentials of the Member elected to fill such vacancy. This is the position maintained in the report of the committee.

The third is that it does not terminate until the Member elected to fill the vacancy is present to take his seat. This is the position embraced in the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts.

I am sure you will be interested in what Senator Benton, of Missouri, said concerning the practice of the Senate, speaking, as is well known, from his 30 years' experience as a member of this body. He remarked:

I have been accustomed to see Senators who held appointments under the same form that the Senator from Massachusetts did sit in their seats until their successors arrived. And I have seen them when their successors arrived introduce them, get up, and give them their seats, and go out. I have seen that, and I have become accustomed to it. It corresponds to what I think is due to every State, what is due to the system of representation, that if there be any doubt at all in a question of this kind the benefit of that doubt should be given to the State. She should have the benefit of a full representation up to the last moment. There should be no gap or interval.

In the volume to which I have referred, the Senate Election Cases, the list of cases referred to in the earlier volume, in which is found the report made by the Senate Judiciary Committee in 1850, is supplemented by a large number of cases running down to the year 1913. It is headed:

A list showing all the appointments of Senators by governors of States prior to March 4, 1913, arranged in the order of time that the credentials were read in the Senate.

In no instance does it appear that any controversy was ever raised as to the right of the governor's appointee to sit and participate in the deliberations of the Senate until his or her successor appeared with the proper credentials.

These are all, of course, constructions of the original Constitution, and the seventeenth amendment was adopted in view of the practical construction given to the corresponding provision of the work of the fathers by the Senate itself. Under well-established principles of construction, the language being changed only so far as was necessary to express the purpose to change the method of election, the people indorsed the construction of the clause of the Constitution in question implied in the practice which had been observed by the Senate, and intended that the amendment should be similarly construed.

I have said this much because I did not like to have it appear, if the lady is sworn in—as I have no doubt she is entitled to be sworn in—that the Senate had so far departed from its duty in the premises as to extend so grave a right to her as a favor, or as a mere matter of courtesy, or being moved by a spirit of gallantry, but rather that the Senate, being fully advised about it, decided that she was entitled to take the oath.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the certificate presented by the Senator from Georgia.

The reading clerk read as follows:

THE STATE OF GEORGIA.

By his excellency Thomas W. Hardwick, Governor of said State.

To the Hon. REBECCA LATIMER FELTON, greeting:

Whereas, in conformity with the provisions of the constitution and laws of this State, you were on the 3d day of October, 1922, appointed Senator in the Congress of the United States:

Now, therefore, by virtue of the power and authority in me vested by the constitution and laws of this State, and in pursuance of your appointment, I do hereby commission you, the said REBECCA LATIMER FELTON, Senator in the Congress of the United States from the State of Georgia.

This commission shall continue in force from the 3d day of October, 1922, and until your successor is elected and qualified, unless the same shall be sooner vacated or annulled in the manner authorized by the constitution and laws of this State.

ALLEGED OUTRAGES IN LOUISIANA.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I rise to a question of privilege, as one of the Senators from Louisiana, whose citizenship and institutions have been grossly misrepresented during the past three days by one of the newspapers of this city.

Mr. President, I was shocked and grieved to read in the usually conservative Washington Post of the 19th, 20th, and 21st instant, under scare headlines, on the first page of each day's issue, a most remarkable story of crime, lawlessness, and terrorism in Louisiana. If the statements in these articles were correct, the plight of my State would be sad indeed, but they are very far from the truth.

I can not conceive how such sweeping, libelous, extremely damaging statements in regard to an entire sovereign State—not to some community thereof—could have been given even ordinary publicity in a reputable newspaper, but when placed on the first page of one of the greatest journals in America, issued at the Nation's Capital, under headings so large as to attract universal attention, it is utterly incomprehensible. I can not believe the Post set out willfully and deliberately to slander and destroy the good name of Louisiana, but unless immediate retraction is made by it in the same conspicuous way that the libel was uttered, the effect is certain to be most injurious.

I traveled over several parts of Louisiana during the past six weeks and met a great many of its citizens. Conditions seemed to be normal everywhere; the courts were functioning as usual; the people were attending fairs and armistice-day celebrations with apparent relish; business was excellent in many places and poor in others; there was no general unrest; the press was free and outspoken on all subjects, including the Ku-Klux Klan; there was no more crime than usual.

I heard much comment about the Mer Rouge outrage, which probably resulted in the murder of two men under dastardly circumstances, and gossip connected individual members of the Ku-Klux Klan with this crime—I say probable murder, as the two men referred to disappeared months ago, have never been heard from since, and there is every reason to believe they were foully murdered. This deplorable affair was an isolated one, in a thinly populated community, and it cost the lives of but two human beings and the cruel beating of two others. No one has been tried for it as yet, but I am assured that evidence is being secured, and when obtained, that the murderers will be brought to justice and prosecuted with all the power which the attorney general of the State and the local authorities can muster.

This Mer Rouge crime, by odds the worst that has occurred in Louisiana during the past four years, pales into insignificance when compared to the horrors of the race riots of 1920 in Chicago; the West Virginia miners' civil war of 1921; and the Herrin, Ill., wholesale murders of helpless men because they wished to work, only a few months ago. It would have been a very unjust slander on the States of West Virginia and Illinois to say, because of these terrible crimes, that their courts had ceased to function; their citizens were in terror; their press had been silenced; outrages against persons were frequent and never punished, and so forth. And yet when a crime small in comparison with those of West Virginia and Illinois occurs in one of the 64 parishes of Louisiana, the whole State, with its nearly 2,000,000 people, is held up to scorn before mankind. The statements in the Post are vicious and untrue!

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I was much interested in the statement of personal privilege offered by the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL]. I would not refer to the subject were it not for the fact that I have some letters in my possession that may explain in part some of the statements made in the press in reference to law enforcement in Louisiana. I hope the news story about the power and influence of the Ku-Klux Klan in that State was exaggerated. I can not conceive of such an un-American spirit getting a foothold in any Commonwealth of the United States. It is difficult for Americans who believe in the Constitution to conceive of the special kind of intolerance alleged to be rampant in certain parts of this country.

Religious bigotry in individual cases may be explained, but it is inconceivable that there could be in this enlightened day and in a nation whose proud boast is "The land of the free and the home of the brave" the wholesale bigotry and prejudice against members of certain religious denominations and races that is alleged to prevail. Are we approaching a period in our history when groups of individuals demand that the principles laid down in our Constitution shall be applied to themselves but not to all other Americans?

There is no use of disguising the fact that this outlawry exists. It showed its heinous and venomous character here and there in the recent election. It is threatening control of the political machinery of our political parties. The letters that have come to me from most conservative and intelligent people in various parts of this country have astounded me with the extent and horrors of its practices. These letters seem to indicate that this organized spirit of intolerance is not only seeking to deny political rights to classes of our citizens but is even trying to destroy equality of opportunity, even for men and women in the humble walks of life, which is one of our most glorious inheritances.

The individual, organization, or political party that spreads a gospel of hate and dissension among our fellow citizens is striking a death blow at democratic institutions more destructive than that effort to destroy democracy which caused us to send our soldiers to fight in France in 1917. Let the leaders of all political parties refuse to silently accept the influence and support of secret organizations whose purposes are to promote propaganda of prejudice and persecution. The political party that does not repudiate such organizations will in time exterminate itself. The American people, when the issue is made clear, will not hesitate to support the Constitution.

The assertion, so forcibly denied by the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], that religious, civil, and human liberty is suppressed in that State may be exaggerated; but America is not free from this malignant propaganda while a single citizen of the most distant hamlet is denied complete protection against every form of religious prejudice and racial persecution.

The annihilation of such undemocratic and tyrannical movements ought to be led by those who are not of the religious or racial groups that are its victims. It is time for liberty-loving, broad-minded Americans to act before our free institutions be further undermined. Above everything else, let us not wait until the victims are driven in desperation to free themselves from religious and racial proscription by resort to religious and racial proscription.

I have a letter from the Governor of Louisiana addressed to an ex-service man, in which he asks this ex-service man to write Senators and Congressmen urging the Department of Justice to assist in bringing to justice those involved in a murder assumed to have been committed through the influence of the Ku-Klux Klan. I shall, without further comment, ask that the letter, addressed to me by a very reputable citizen of the State of New York, an ex-service man, in which he refers to the murder of one of his associates in the war, and the letter sent by the Governor of Louisiana to him in reference to the attempt to prosecute the murderers may be read at the desk. It is evident from the letter of Governor Parker that he has sought the assistance of the Department of Justice to bring at least some murderers to the bar of justice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the letters will be read as requested.

The letters were read, as follows:

JOSEPH MORNINGSTAR & CO. (INC.),
New York, November 9, 1922.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Senator from Massachusetts, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am sending you herewith a copy of the New Orleans Item which outlines the crime perpetrated in Morehouse Parish, La., and a letter from the Hon. John M. Parker, Governor of Louisiana, addressed to me.

The facts speak so clearly for themselves that any comment I may make upon them would be superfluous.

You are undoubtedly aware what the Ku-Klux Klan stands for and I know that you feel, as I do, that it is a privilege to line up on the other side.

The reason I am interesting myself in this case is because Fillmore Wyatt Daniel served overseas with me in the same company with the rank of sergeant, in A Company, Three hundred and thirty-sixth Battalion, Tank Corps. At the time of his enlistment Daniel was well beyond the draft age and could have been exempted in any case as an agriculturist. Nevertheless he left his old father to run one of the largest cotton plantations in that part of the country to do his duty as a citizen and a man, regardless of the technical justification the Government gave him for staying at home.

Just how well his State and country have rewarded him so far can be seen by the inclosed letter and newspaper.

Where the governor of a State admits that justice can not be secured through local authority it seems obvious that the Federal authorities gain jurisdiction, and the copy of the letter of Governor Parker clearly puts this case in that category.

If you could spare a small fraction of your time to see that justice is done there is no question in my mind that more good would come of it because of your eminence in the national standing.

While I have laid these facts before the Department of Justice I have had nothing of encouragement yet. A request from you and any of your colleagues that you may interest in this case would do more to right this grievous wrong than anything that I could do.

I can testify, as can Daniel's comrades, that he was a man of the highest character and moral integrity, a man who made himself beloved to his fellows because of his unfailing generosity, sympathy, and manliness.

During the whole exposé of the Klan by the New York World and other papers, never has such a flagrant case been noted.

Sincerely hoping that you will help us, his comrades, to see that justice is done, I respectfully subscribe myself,

JOSEPH MORNINGSTAR.

STATE OF LOUISIANA,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Baton Rouge, October 30, 1922.

Mr. JOS. MORNINGSTAR,
650 West Thirty-fourth Street, New York, N. Y.

DEAR MR. MORNINGSTAR: Don't think that I, for a second, let up in my determination to bring the murderers of Daniel to trial, if possible.

I deeply regret to say that there is a very large per cent of Ku-Klux in Morehouse Parish, and, from the evidence received by me, Daniel was one of the few men who was absolutely fearless and openly defied them.

It will be necessary to use all the influence at your command to get the United States Government to take an interest in this matter, and for that reason I would appreciate your writing me at length your opinion of this man as a soldier, and put it in such a shape that I can send it to Washington with the certainty that it will bring results. If these results do not come quickly, could I impose upon you by asking you to get in touch with all your Congressmen and Senators, requesting that they take the matter up with the Department of Justice to see that not only is this matter probed to the bottom, but that the murderers are brought before the bar of justice? Every possible effort at my command is and will be used to that end.

Cordially yours,

JNO. M. PARKER, Governor.

RESIGNATION OF SENATOR NEWBERRY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the following communication, which the Secretary will read.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

DETROIT, MICH., November 17, 1922.

Hon. CALVIN COOLIDGE,
The Vice President, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I inclose herewith a copy of my resignation which I have this day forwarded to the Governor of the State of Michigan, and I respectfully request that this be read into the records of the Senate as soon as possible.

Yours respectfully,

TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY.

DETROIT, MICH., November 15, 1922.

Hon. ALEX. J. GROESBECK,
Governor of Michigan, Lansing, Mich.

SIR: I tender herewith my resignation as United States Senator from Michigan, to take immediate effect.

I am impelled to take this action because at the recent election, notwithstanding his long and faithful public service and his strict adherence to the basic principles of constructive Republicanism which I hold in common with him, Senator TOWNSEND was defeated. While this failure to reelect him may have been brought about, in part, by over four years of continued propaganda of misrepresentation and untruth, a fair analysis of the vote in Michigan and other States where friends and political enemies alike have suffered defeat will demonstrate that a general feeling of unrest was mainly responsible therefor.

This situation renders futile further service by me in the United States Senate, where I have consistently supported the progressive policies of President Harding's administration. My work there has been and would continue to be hampered by partisan political persecution, and I, therefore, cheerfully return my commission to the people from whom I received it.

I desire to record an expression of my gratitude for the splendid friendship, loyalty, and devotion of those who have endured with me during the past four years experiences unparalleled in the political history of our country. By direction of the Democratic administration, these began immediately upon my nomination, by proceedings before a specially selected grand jury, sitting in another State, which, by a vote of 16 to 1, completely exonerated those who had conducted my campaign. Then followed my election, with every issue which has since been raised clearly before the electorate of the State. A recount was demanded, and after a thorough and painstaking review of the ballots by the United States Senate, I was found to have received a substantial majority. While this was in progress I was subjected, with a large number of representative men of Michigan who had supported me, to a trial, following indictments procured by a Democratic Department of Justice, which through hundreds of agents had bounded, and terrified men in all parts of the State into believing that some wrong had been done. Under the instructions given by the court, convictions of a conspiracy to spend more than $5,750 naturally followed, and sentence imposing fines and imprisonment was immediately passed. All charges of bribery and corruption were, however, quashed by the specific order of the presiding judge.

On appeal, the Supreme Court of the United States reversed the action of the court below, because, as stated by Chief Justice White, of the grave misapprehension and the grievous misapplication of the statute, which was also declared unconstitutional. A protracted investigation before the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate resulted in a report sustaining my election; and after a bitter partisan debate the Senate declared that I was entitled to my seat.

In view of all these proceedings my right to my seat has been fully confirmed, and I am thankful to have been permitted to serve my State and my country, and to have the eternal satisfaction of having by my vote aided in keeping the United States out of the League of Nations.

For those who so patriotically and unselfishly worked for my election, and in defense of my own honor and that of my family and friends, I have fought the fight and kept the faith. The time has now come, however, when I can conscientiously lay down the burden, and this I most cheerfully do. If in the future there seem to be opportunities for public service, I shall not hesitate to offer my services to the State which I love and the country I revere.

Respectfully,

TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I shall not occupy the time of the Senate more than a moment. The communication which has just been read at the desk from Senator NEWBERRY is of great import. It will send a thrill of joy into every American home. It will be "glad tidings of good news" to all Americans. It augurs well for this session of Congress, that so soon after the recent political cyclone, we should begin, as we have to-day, by seating a distinguished lady as Senator from Georgia and then hearing read from the desk this communication of resignation.

Mr. President, individual Senators may err and majorities may make mistakes, but the good common sense of the American people in the end generally prevails. Their high ideals, their sense of justice, their allegiance to the purity of the ballot, their respect for the integrity of this body have wrung from unwilling hands what an autocratic and partisan majority in this body refused to do. The minority receives with pleasure, and I am sure all Americans with gratification, this communication. I congratulate the American people on what they have accomplished wherein the Republican Senate had failed. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Applause in the galleries is not permitted by the rules of the Senate, and a repetition will result in having the galleries cleared.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I wish to follow what has been said by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] with an expression of the hope that in the future the use of money on a scale so gigantic as to affect unfairly the electorate will not be repeated in the United States by either a Republican or a Democrat. I believe that we ought to pass a law which would forbid any man, a Republican or a Democrat or a man of any other party, holding a place on this floor where money has been used extravagantly and wrongly and contrary to a reasonable rule and a reasonable law to bring about his election.

The duty is upon us to pass an honest election law which will prevent the recurrence of this abuse. It ought to be done by this Congress before the session ends.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication which was read at the desk will lie on the table.

LIBERIAN LOAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 270) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a credit with the United States for the Government of Liberia.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], in charge of the unfinished business, will not consent to temporarily lay it aside until we can get through with morning business.

Mr. CURTIS. I was about to make that request. I ask unanimous consent to temporarily lay aside the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to make a very brief statement. I am advised by those interested in the unfinished business that we probably will make time by having it put over until to-morrow as there are some resolutions in regard to deaths of Members and other matters which Senators desire to have presented. I shall at the proper time ask that the joint resolution may go over until to-morrow, but at present I merely want to have it temporarily laid aside.

INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER CO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Attorney General, in response to Senate Resolution 223, agreed to January 24, 1922, relative to any further proceedings contemplated in the case of the United States v. International Harvester Co. et al., which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., September 22, 1922.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of and to comply with Senate Resolution No. 223, calling on the Attorney General for information as to what, if any, further proceedings are contemplated in the case of United States v. International Harvester Co. et al. Omitting the preamble, the resolution provides—

"That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate what action, if any, is contemplated by the Department of Justice to bring about a modification of said decree, in order that the same may comply with the real judgment rendered by the court in said case; or, if such course be not practical, whether the Department of Justice contemplates any other separate and independent action against said International Harvester Co. for the purpose of effectively restoring competitive conditions between the various corporations composing and comprising said International Harvester Co."

The Government's suit against the International Harvester Co. was filed in the United States District Court for Minnesota in April, 1912. The case was heard by the circuit judges of the eighth circuit, who held (Judges Smith, Hook, and Adams, concurring, and Judge Sanborn, dissenting) that the company constituted a combination in restraint of trade in violation of the Sherman Act, and entered a decree providing that—

"The business and assets of the International Harvester Co. be divided in such manner and into such number of parts of separate and distinct ownership as may be necessary to restore competitive conditions and bring about a new situation in harmony with law."

The Harvester company appealed from this decree to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the case was argued there in April, 1915. On June 2 the case was restored to the docket and was again argued at the next succeeding term and was a second time restored to the docket for reargument. In October, 1918, the Harvester company dismissed its appeal, and there was entered by the district court a decree of dissolution which had been negotiated by counsel for the defendant and the Attorney General. By the terms of the decree the Harvester company was required to sell and dispose of the harvesting machine lines made and sold by it under the trade names of "Osborne," "Milwaukee," and "Champion," together with the Osborne and Champion plants.

In compliance with the decree the International Harvester Co. has sold the Champion and Osborne lines. By a modification of the decree entered in the summer of 1920 the Harvester company has been relieved of the necessity of selling the plants, for the reason that the purchasers of the lines were already engaged in the harvesting implement business with plants of their own. The company has not disposed of the Milwaukee line for the reason that it has not found a purchaser therefor.

On May 4, 1920, the Federal Trade Commission made its report, entitled "Report on the causes of high prices of farm implements," mentioned in the preamble to Resolution No. 223. This report followed a comprehensive investigation of conditions in the farm-implement trade conducted pursuant to a resolution of the Senate. It condemns the decree in the Harvester case as wholly inadequate, because there was no provision for the disposition of either the McCormick or Deering lines of harvesting machines. These lines, it declares, were the predominant lines in 1902, when the Harvester company was formed, and have been continued as the principal ones by that company since, and no dissolution can have the effect to restore competitive conditions which leaves both in the hands of the same company. The report recommends, among other things, that the Harvester case be reopened, "so that a plan of dissolution be arrived at that will restore competitive conditions in the harvesting-machine business."

Paragraph (e) of the final decree provides as follows:

"The object to be attained under the terms of this decree is to restore competitive conditions in the United States in the interstate business in harvesting machines and other agricultural implements; and, in the event that such competitive conditions shall not have been established at the expiration of 18 months after the termination of the existing war in which the United States is engaged (or at the expiration of two years from the date of the entry of this decree, in the event that said war shall be terminated within less than six months after the entry of this decree), then, in that case, the United States shall have the right to such further relief herein as shall be necessary to restore said competitive conditions and to bring about a situation in harmony with law; and this court reserves all necessary jurisdiction and power to carry into effect the provisions of the decrees herein entered."

1. After careful consideration of this language, and of such information as I have been able to obtain relative to the understanding of the negotiations of the decree, I am forced to the conclusion that this provision was intended to set up a test period in which it might be determined whether the relief granted was adequate to the purpose of the decree. In other words, that a period of 18 months from and after the conclusion of the war must elapse within which to judge of the efficacy of the decree before further proceedings may be had thereunder with a view to enlarging the relief. The paragraph does not provide, as has been assumed by the Federal Trade Commission, that during the period in question the United States shall have the right to further relief if competitive conditions have not been restored, but that the United States shall have the right to such relief upon a proper showing at the expiration of such period.

Answering specifically the first question propounded by the Senate, in my opinion the time is not ripe for further proceedings under the decree with a view to obtaining additional relief. At the expiration of the test period set up in the decree the Department of Justice, in consultation with the Federal Trade Commission, will consider what, if any, further relief may be necessary in order to effect the declared purpose of the decree and will take the necessary steps to give effect to the conclusions arrived at.

2. Responding to the alternative question asked in the resolution, I have the honor to advise you that the Department of Justice does not now contemplate any separate and independent action against the International Harvester Co. The Government having put in issue in the pending suit the entire question of the legality of the combination, and that question having been resolved in its favor and a decree entered, the Government is bound by that decree as well as the defendants, and the effect of the decree can not be avoided on the ground that it was improvidently negotiated by former officers of the Department of Justice. Unless the Harvester company shall by further acquisitions of competitors or by oppressive conduct give rise to a new cause of action, additional relief against it as a combination or monopoly will have to be obtained under the terms of the existing decree.

Respectfully,

GUY D. GOFF,
Acting Attorney General.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

APPROPRIATIONS FOR MILEAGE, ETC.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 12859, to provide for certain expenses incident to the third session of the Sixty-seventh Congress, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the appropriations for mileage and stationery for Senators, Members of the House of Representatives, and Delegates from the Territories, and expenses of Resident Commissioners, contained in the act making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year 1923, are authorized to be paid to Senators, Members of the House of Representatives, Delegates from the Territories, and Resident Commissioners, for attendance on the third session of the Sixty-seventh Congress.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for session employees on account of the third session of the Sixty-seventh Congress: For 42 pages at $2.50 per day each from November 20 to December 3, 1922, inclusive, $1,470; for 3 session telephone operators at the rate of $75 per month each from November 20 to November 30, 1922, inclusive, $82.50; in all, $1,552.50.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which has just been reported. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I observe the first paragraph of this bill simply makes available at this time the mileage appropriation already provided for Members, Delegates, and so forth, for the regular session of this Congress.

Mr. MADDEN. That is all.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May I ask the gentleman a question which, I take it, will likely arise? Has he himself or his committee, or both, considered the question of mileage as applied to the next regular session of this Congress in the event that we make this available at this time?

Mr. MADDEN. There has been no consideration given to the question of mileage for the next regular session, but I say frankly to the gentleman from Tennessee and to the Members of the House that personally I think there ought not to be any additional mileage; that the payment of mileage already appropriated ought to apply to cover the entire period of this special session of Congress and the next regular session which will begin on December 4 next; that no additional appropriation should be made. So far as I am concerned, I am opposed to making any additional appropriation. I can not speak for the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I agree with the gentleman in his views, Mr. Speaker, but it seemed to me quite desirable at this time to have an official statement, and the gentleman can practically make an official statement on this subject.

Mr. MADDEN. I shall not submit for the consideration of the Committee on Appropriations any proposal to appropriate any additional sum for mileage for the period ending on the 4th of March next.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is contemplated, of course, that this extra session will run into the other?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; that it will merge into the regular session. I would say also, for the information of the House, that in 1913 a special session of the Congress was called on April 7. That session ran through the summer and up into the regular session of Congress beginning in December, and continued on until the next October. For 19 months the Congress was in constant session. Mileage at the beginning of the special session was made available, as this bill proposes now, but there was no additional appropriation for the regular session, and it would be unwise and unjust for us to undertake to make additional appropriations for the session about to begin on the 4th of December next and end on the 4th of March following. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman is following a good precedent. Will the gentleman kindly give us some information about the second paragraph, the item in respect to pages?

Mr. MADDEN. It is for the pay of the pages, who will be paid only for the period of their service from now until the 4th of December. After the regular session begins their pay is provided for in the annual appropriation bills. This is simply to meet the expenses between now and when that session begins.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I assume that this merely includes the House pages?

Mr. MADDEN. Just the House pages.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And the Senate will have to amend the bill to include their own pages?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; if there is any such thing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MADDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE TO WAIT UPON THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the committee appointed by the Speaker on the part of the House of Representatives to join with a committee on the part of the Senate to notify the President of the United States that a quorum of each House is assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication that he may be pleased to make, I have the honor to report that the committee has performed its duty and that the President of the United States has informed the joint committee that he will be pleased to communicate with the Congress in person to-day.

Mr. Speaker, I submit the following concurrent resolution for a joint session to receive the communication of the President of the United States, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 72.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Tuesday, the 21st day of November, 1922, at 12.30 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communication as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

RECESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess, subject to the call of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess, subject to the call of the Chair. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly, at 12 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m., the House stood in recess.

AFTER RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House (at 12 o'clock and 26 minutes p. m.) resumed its session.

JOINT SESSION OF SENATE AND HOUSE.

At 12 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m. the members of the President's Cabinet entered the hall and took seats on the left of the Speaker's rostrum.

At 12 o'clock and 29 minutes p. m. the Doorkeeper announced the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Members of the Senate.

The Members of the House rose.

The Senate, preceded by their President pro tempore and their Sergeant at Arms, entered the Chamber.

The President pro tempore of the Senate took the chair at the right of the Speaker, and the Members of the Senate took the seats reserved for them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following committee on behalf of the House to wait upon the President and escort him to the Hall: Mr. MONDELL, Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, Mr. EDMONDS, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, and Mr. LAZARO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore of the Senate. On behalf of the Senate the Chair appoints the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

At 12 o'clock and 29 minutes p. m. the President of the United States, escorted by the committee of Senators and Representatives, entered the Hall of the House, was announced by the Doorkeeper, and stood at the Clerk's desk amid applause on the floor and in the galleries.

ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT.

The PRESIDENT. Members of the Congress: Late last February I reported to you relative to the American merchant marine, and recommended legislation which the executive branch of the Government deemed essential to promote our merchant marine and with it our national welfare. Other problems were pressing and other questions pending, and for one reason or another, which need not be recited, the suggested legislation has not progressed beyond a favorable recommendation by the House committee. The committee has given the question a full and painstaking inquiry and study, and I hope that its favorable report speedily will be given the force of law.

It will be helpful in clearing the atmosphere if we start with the frank recognition of divided opinion and determined opposition. It is no new experience. Like proposals have divided the Congress on various previous occasions. Perhaps a more resolute hostility never was manifest before, and I am very sure the need for decisive action—decisive, favorable action—never was so urgent before.

We are not now dealing with a policy founded on theory; we have a problem which is one of grim actuality. We are facing insistent conditions, out of which will come either additional and staggering Government losses and national impotence on the seas, or else the unfurling of the flag on a great American merchant marine commensurate with our commercial importance, to serve as carrier of our cargoes in peace and meet the necessities of our defense in war. There is no thought here and now to magnify the relation of a merchant marine to our national defense. It is enough to recall that we entered the World War almost wholly dependent on our Allies for transportation by sea. We expended approximately three billions, feverishly, extravagantly, wastefully, and impracticably. Out of our eagerness to make up for the omissions of peace and to meet the war emergency we builded and otherwise acquired the vast merchant fleet which the Government owns to-day.

In the simplest way I can say it, our immediate problem is not to build and support a merchant shipping, which I hold to be one of the highest and most worthy aspirations of any great people; our problem is to deal with what we now possess. Our problem is to relieve the Public Treasury of the drain it is already meeting. Let us omit particulars about the frenzied war-time building. Possibly we did full as well as could have been done in the anxious circumstances. Let us pass for the moment the vital relationship between a merchant marine and a commercially aspiring nation. Aye, let us suppose for a moment the absurdity that with one $3,000,000,000 experience, and with the incalculable costs in lives and treasure which may be chargeable to our inability promptly to apply our potency—which God forefend happening again—let us momentarily ignore all of these and turn to note the mere business problem, the practical question of dollars and cents with which we are confronted.

The war construction and the later completion of war contracts, where completion was believed to be the greater economy to the Public Treasury, left us approximately 13,200,000 gross tonnage in ships. The figures are nearer 12,500,000 tons now, owing to the scrapping of the wooden fleet. More than half this tonnage is Government owned, and approximately 2,250,000 tons are under Government operation in one form or another. The net loss to the United States Treasury—sums actually taken therefrom in this Government operation—averaged approximately $16,000,000 per month during the year prior to the assumption of responsibility by the present administration. A constant warfare on this loss of public funds, and the draft to service of capable business management and experienced operating directors, have resulted in applied efficiency and enforced economies. It is very gratifying to report the diminution of the losses to $4,000,000 per month, or a total of $50,000,000 a year; but it is intolerable that the Government should continue a policy from which so enormous a Treasury loss is the inevitable outcome. This loss, moreover, attends operation of less than a third of the Government-owned fleet.

It is not, therefore, a question of adding new Treasury burdens to maintain our shipping; we are paying these burdens now. It is not a question of contracting an outlay to support our merchant shipping, because we are paying already. I am not asking your authorization of a new and added draft on the Public Treasury; I am appealing for a program to diminish the burden we are already bearing.

When your executive government knows of public expenditures aggregating fifty millions annually, which it believes could be reduced by half through a change of policy, your government would be unworthy of public trust if such a change were not commended, nay, if it were not insistently urged.

And the pity of it is that our present expenditure in losses is not constructive. It looks to no future attainments. It is utterly ineffective in the establishment of a dependable merchant marine, whereas the encouragement of private ownership and the application of individual initiative would make for a permanent creation, ready and answerable at all times to the needs of the Nation.

But I have not properly portrayed all the current losses to the Public Treasury. We are wearing out our ships without any provision for replacement. We are having these losses through deterioration now, and are charging nothing against our capital account. But the losses are there, and regrettably larger under Government operation than under private control. Only a few years of continued losses on capital account will make these losses through depreciation alone to exceed the fifty millions a year now drawn to cover losses in operation.

The gloomy picture of losses does not end even there. Notwithstanding the known war cost of $3,000,000,000 for the present tonnage, I will not venture to appraise its cash value to-day. It may as well be confessed now as at some later time that in the mad rush to build, in establishing shipyards wherever men would organize to expend Government money, when we made shipbuilders overnight quite without regard to previous occupations or pursuits, we builded poorly, often very poorly. Moreover, we constructed without any formulated program for a merchant marine. The war emergency impelled, and the cry was for ships, any kind of ships. The error is recalled in regret rather than criticism. The point is that our fleet, costing approximately $3,000,000,000, is worth only a fraction of that cost to-day. Whatever that fraction may be, the truth remains that we have no market in which to sell the ships under our present policy, and a program of surrender and sacrifice and the liquidation which is inevitable unless the pending legislation is sanctioned, will cost scores of millions more.

When the question is asked, Why the insistence for the merchant marine act now? the answer is apparent. Waiving every inspiration which lies in a constructive plan for maintaining prudence in safeguarding against another $3,000,000,000 madness if war ever again impels, we have the unavoidable task of wiping out a $50,000,000 annual loss in operation, and losses aggregating many hundreds of millions in worn-out, sacrificed, or scrapped shipping. Then the supreme humiliation, the admission that the United States—our America, once eminent among the maritime nations of the world—is incapable of asserting itself in the peace triumphs on the seas of the world. It would seem to me doubly humiliating when we own the ships and fail in the genius and capacity to turn their prows toward the marts of the world.

This problem can not longer be ignored, its attempted solution can not longer be postponed. The failure of Congress to act decisively will be no less disastrous than adverse action.

Three courses of action are possible, and the choice among them is no longer to be avoided.

The first is constructive—enact the pending bill, under which, I firmly believe, an American merchant marine, privately owned and privately operated, but serving all the people and always available to the Government in any emergency, may be established and maintained.

The second is obstructive—continue Government operations and attending Government losses and discourage private enterprise by Government competition, under which losses are met by the Public Treasury, and witness the continued losses and deterioration until the colossal failure ends in sheer exhaustion.

The third is destructive—involving the sacrifice of our ships abroad or the scrapping of them at home, the surrender of our aspirations, and the confession of our impotence to the world in general, and our humiliation before the competing world in particular.

A choice among the three is inevitable. It is unbelievable that the American people or the Congress which expresses their power will consent to surrender and destruction. It is equally unbelievable that our people and the Congress which translates their wishes into action will longer sustain a program of obstruction and attending losses to the Treasury.

I have come to urge the constructive alternative, to reassert an American "We will." [Applause.] I have come to ask you to relieve the responsible administrative branch of the Government from a program upon which failure and hopelessness and staggering losses are written for every page, and let us turn to a program of assured shipping to serve us in war and to give guaranty to our commercial independence in peace.

I know full well the hostility in the popular mind to the word "subsidy." It is stressed by the opposition and associated with "special privilege" by those who are unfailing advocates of Government aid whenever vast numbers are directly concerned. "Government aid" would be a fairer term than "subsidy" in defining what we are seeking to do for our merchant marine, and the interests are those of all the people, even though the aid goes to the few who serve.

If Government aid is a fair term—and I think it is—to apply to authorizations aggregating $75,000,000 to promote good roads for market highways, it is equally fit to be applied to the establishment and maintenance of American market highways on the salted seas. If Government aid is the proper designation for fifteen to forty millions annually expended to improve and maintain inland waterways in aid of commerce, it is a proper designation for a needed assistance to establish and maintain ocean highways where there is actual commerce to be carried.

But call it "subsidy," since there are those who prefer to appeal to mistaken prejudice rather than make frank and logical argument. We might so call the annual loss of fifty millions, which we are paying now without protest by those who most abhor, we might as well call that a "subsidy." If so, I am proposing to cut it in half, approximately, and to the saving thus effected there would be added millions upon millions of further savings through ending losses on capital account—Government capital, out of the Public Treasury, always remember—and there would be at least the promise and the prospect of the permanent establishment of the needed merchant marine.

I challenged every insinuation of favored interests and the enrichment of the special few at the expense of the Public Treasury. I am, first of all, appealing to save the Treasury. Perhaps the unlimited bestowal of Government aid might justify the apprehension of special favoring, but the pending bill, the first ever proposed which carries such a provision, automatically guards against enrichment or perpetuated bestowal. It provides that shipping lines receiving Government aid must have their actual investment and their operating expenses audited by the Government, that Government aid will only be paid until the shipping enterprise earns 10 per cent on actual capital employed, and immediately that when more than 10 per cent earning is reached half of the excess earnings must be applied to the repayment of the Government aid which has been previously advanced. Thus the possible earnings are limited to a very reasonable amount if capital is to be risked and management is to be attracted. If success attends, as we hope it will, the Government outlay is returned, the inspiration of opportunity to earn remains, and American transportation by sea is established.

Though differing in detail, it is not more in proportion to their population and capacity than other great nations have done in aiding the establishment of their merchant marines, and it is timely to recall that we gave them our commerce to aid in their upbuilding, while the American task now is to upbuild and establish in the face of their most active competition. Indeed, the American development will have to overcome every obstacle which may be put in our path, except as international comity forbids. Concern about our policy is not limited to our own domain, though the interest abroad is of very differing character. I hope it is seemly to say it, because it must be said, the maritime nations of the world are in complete accord with the opposition here to the pending measure. They have a perfect right to such an attitude. When we look from their viewpoints we can understand. But I wish to stress the American viewpoint. Ours should be the viewpoint from which one sees American carriers at sea, the dependence of American commerce, and American vessels for American reliance in the event of war. Some of the costly lessons of war must be learned again and again, but our shipping lesson in the World War was much too costly to be effaced from the memory of this or future generations.

Not so many months ago the head of a company operating a fleet of ships under our flag called at the Executive Offices to discuss a permit to transfer his fleet of cargo vessels to a foreign flag, though he meant to continue them in a distinctly American service. He based his request for transfer on the allegation that by such a transfer he could reduce his labor costs alone sufficiently to provide a profit on capital invested. I do not vouch for the accuracy of the statement nor mean to discuss it. The allusion is made to recall that in good conscience Congress has created by law conditions surrounding labor on American ships which shipping men the world over declare result in higher costs of operation under our flag. I frankly rejoice if higher standards for labor on American ships have been established. Merest justice suggests that when Congress fixes these standards it is fair to extend Government aid in maintaining them until world competition is brought to the same high level, or until our shipping lines are so firmly established that they can face world competition alone. [Applause.]

Having discussed in detail the policy and provisions of the pending bill when previously addressing you, I forbear a repetition now. In individual exchanges of opinion not a few in House or Senate have expressed personal sympathy with the purposes of the bill and then uttered a discouraging doubt about the sentiment of their constituencies. It would be most discouraging if a measure of such transcending national importance must have its fate depend on geographical, occupational, professional, or partisan objections. Frankly, I think it loftier statesmanship to support and commend a policy designed to effect the larger good to the Nation than merely to record the too hasty impressions of a constituency. Out of the harmonized aspirations, the fully informed convictions, and the united efforts of all the people will come the greater Republic. Commercial eminence on the seas, ample agencies for the promotion and carrying of our foreign commerce, are of no less importance to the people of Mississippi and the Missouri Valley, the great Northwest, and the Rocky Mountain States than to the seaboard States and industrial communities building inland a thousand miles or more. It is a common cause, with its benefits commonly shared. When people fall in the national viewpoint, and live in the confines of community selfishness or narrowness, the sun of this Republic will have passed its meridian, and our larger aspirations will shrivel in the approaching twilight.

But let us momentarily put aside the aspiring and inspiring viewpoint. The blunt, indisputable fact of the loss of fifty millions a year under Government operation remains; likewise the fast diminishing capital account, the enormous war expenditure, to which we were forced because we had not fittingly encouraged and builded as our commerce expanded in peace. Here are facts to deal with, not fancies wrought out of our political and economic disputes. The abolition of the annual loss and the best salvage of the capital account are of concern to all the people.

It is my firm belief that the combined savings of operating losses and the protection of the capital account through more advantageous sales of our war-built or war-seized ships, because of the favoring policy which the pending bill will establish, will more than pay every dollar expended in Government aid for 25 years to come.

It should be kept in mind that the approximate sum of five millions annually paid for the transport of ocean mails is no new expenditure. It should be kept in mind that the loan fund to encourage building is not new; it is the law already, enacted by the essential unanimous vote of Congress. It is only included in the pending bill in order to amend so as to assure the exaction of a minimum interest rate by the Government, whereas the existing law leaves the grant of building loans subject to any whim of favoritism.

It should be kept in mind, also, that there are assured limitations of the Government aid proposed. The direct aid, with ocean carrying maintained at our present participation, will not reach twenty millions a year, and the maximum direct aid, if our shipping is so promoted that we carry one-half our deep-sea commerce, will not exceed thirty millions annually. At the very maximum of outlay we should be saving twenty millions of our present annual operating loss. If the maximum is ever reached, the establishment of our merchant marine will have been definitely recorded and the Government-owned fleet fortunately liquidated.

From this point of view it is the simple, incontestable wisdom of businesslike dealing to save all that is possible of the annual loss and avoid the millions sure to be lost to the Government's capital account in sacrificing our fleet. But there is a bigger, broader, more inspiring viewpoint, aye, a patriotic viewpoint. I refer to the constructive action of to-day, which offers the only dependable promise of making our war-time inheritance of ships the foundation of a great agency of commerce in peace and an added guaranty of service when it is necessary to our national defense.

Thus far I have been urging Government aid to American shipping having in mind every interest of our producing population, whether of mine, factory, or farm, because expanding commerce is the foremost thought of every nation in the world to-day.

I believe in Government aid becomingly bestowed. We have aided industry through our tariffs; we have aided railway transportation in land grants and loans. We have aided the construction of market roads and the improvement of inland waterways. We have aided reclamation and irrigation and the development of water power; we have loaned for seed grains in anticipation of harvests. We expend millions in investigation and experimentation to promote a common benefit, though a limited few are the direct beneficiaries. We have loaned hundreds of millions to promote the marketing of American goods. It has all been commendable and highly worth while.

At the present moment the American farmer is the chief sufferer from the cruel readjustments which follow war's inflations, and befitting Government aid to our farmers is highly essential to our national welfare. No people may safely boast a good fortune which the farmer does not share.

Already this Congress and the administrative branch of the Government have given willing ear to the agricultural plea for postwar relief, and much has been done which has proven helpful. Admittedly, it is not enough. Our credit systems, under Government provision and control, must be promptly and safely broadened to relieve our agricultural distress. [Applause.]

To this problem and such others of pressing importance as reasonably may be dealt with in the short session I shall invite your attention at an early day.

I have chosen to confine myself to the specific problem of dealing with our merchant marine because I have asked you to assemble two weeks in advance of the regularly appointed time to expedite its consideration. The executive branch of the Government would feel itself remiss to contemplate our yearly loss and attending failure to accomplish if the conditions were not pressed for your decision. More, I would feel myself lacking in concern for America's future if I failed to stress the beckoning opportunity to equip the United States to assume a befitting place among the nations of the world whose commerce is inseparable from the good fortunes to which rightfully all peoples aspire. [Applause, the Members rising.]

At 1 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m. the President and the Members of his Cabinet retired from the Hall of the House.

Whereupon the President pro tempore and the Members of the Senate returned to their Chamber.

The SPEAKER. The joint session of the two Houses is now adjourned.

At 1 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m. the House resumed its session.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent—

Mr. CABLE (on request of Mr. ARENTZ) was granted leave of absence on account of important business.

Mr. BELL (on request of Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee) was granted leave of absence indefinitely on account of personal illness.

Mr. MCARTHUR (on request of Mr. HAWLEY) was granted leave of absence on account of illness and important business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I think it would be interesting if the gentleman would withhold his motion for a moment to permit an inquiry. It would be interesting to Members of the House generally if they could know, providing the gentleman from Wyoming is in a position to state it, what the program will be to-morrow.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Committee on Rules may present a rule to-morrow for the consideration of the shipping bill. That is likely to be done, although it has not been absolutely determined upon, but it is my expectation that a rule will be presented to-morrow for the consideration of the bill the balance of the week, beginning Thursday.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. To-morrow, of course, is Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. MONDELL. To-morrow would be Calendar Wednesday if it were not for the fact that we are within two weeks of the end of the session.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman understands one or two gentlemen desired a few minutes in which to address the House to-morrow, and I understood from the gentleman earlier in the day that that could be arranged.

Mr. MONDELL. I think that can be arranged, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries reported a revised bill to-day and I am advised that they have also filed a supplemental report and we have not had an opportunity to see it, and it may not be printed. I do not know just when, but representing those who are opposed to the bill I ask the privilege of having time within which to file minority views, say, until and including Saturday.

Mr. MONDELL. Not to interfere with the consideration of the measure, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I agree to that modification.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to have time within which to file minority views, not to interfere with the consideration of the measure. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, November 22, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, November 22, 1922.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Gracious Father, Thou hast been with us in the days gone by. Thou art still the helper of those who trust in Thee. We can rely upon Thine own strong arm. Thy wisdom, and Thy graciousness in all the perplexities and burdens of life. Give us light in our darkness, strength in our weakness, and hope in our despondency, and ever lead us onward through the mazes and contradictions of possible trouble. We ask in Jesus' name. Amen.

ADDRESS BY MRS. REBECCA LATIMER FELTON, SENATOR FROM GEORGIA.

MRS. FELTON. Mr. President, in my very remarkable campaign in Georgia, which, contrary to precedent, all came along after I was selected, one of the very amusing things that came to me by mail was a cartoon from San Antonio, Tex. The cartoon represented the United States Senate in session. The seats seemed to be fully occupied, and there appeared in the picture the figure of a woman who had evidently entered without sending in her card. The gentlemen in the Senate took the situation variously. Some seemed to be a little bit hysterical, but most of them occupied their time looking at the ceiling. Over the cartoon was written the wonderful words, "Will they ask the lady to take a chair?" [Laughter.] I want to return my thanks to-day for the beautiful, hospitable welcome that you have accorded to the lady when you gave her a chair.

I also want to return thanks to the noble men of Georgia. Georgia was very slow in her promises with reference to woman's suffrage. She has been rapid to perform, for Georgia is the first State in the Federal Union composed of 48 States where one chivalric governor went to the front and said, "Send that old lady there and let her look at the Senate for even a day."

The Senator elect from Georgia, Mr. GEORGE, said, "She shall have her day there," and I want to thank him in this presence. He is a worthy successor. I want to plead for your gracious attention to him. He has been most chivalric. The sitting Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] has been most obliging. Indeed, I feel that I am the happiest woman in the United States. I am at home in the Senate for a day. I appreciate this wonderful hospitality and the beautiful attention thus accorded to me.

I want to say further that I commend to your attention the 10,000,000 women voters who are watching this incident. It is a romantic incident, Senators, but it is also a historical event. If Lady Astor, from the State of Virginia, can go to London and be accepted as a member of the British House of Commons, you can take this remnant of the old South that has never flickered in her patriotism to her country and be very well assured that she is not going to discredit her commission.

Let me say, Mr. President, that when the women of the country come in and sit with you, though there may be but very few in the next few years, I pledge you that you will get ability, you will get integrity of purpose, you will get exalted patriotism, and you will get unstinted usefulness.

Mr. President and Senators, I thank you very much for this hearing. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

SENATOR FROM GEORGIA.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I present the credentials of WALTER F. GEORGE, Senator elect from the State of Georgia. I ask that his credentials may be read and that the oath of office be administered to him.

The credentials were read and ordered to be filed, as follows:

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Atlanta.

TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

This is to certify that on the 7th day of November, 1922, WALTER F. GEORGE was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Georgia a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the unexpired term of the late Senator THOMAS E. WATSON, ending March 4, 1927.

Witness: His excellency our governor, Thomas W. Hardwick, and our seal hereto affixed at the capitol this 18th day of November, in the year of our Lord 1922.

THOMAS W. HARDWICK, Governor.

By the governor:
[SEAL.]
S. G. MCLENDON,
Secretary of State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator elect from Georgia will present himself at the desk and take the oath of office.

Mr. GEORGE, escorted by Mr. HARRIS, advanced to the Vice President's desk; and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

EXPENSES OF THIRD SESSION, SIXTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS.

The bill (H. R. 12859) to provide for certain expenses incident to the third session of the Sixty-seventh Congress was read twice by its title.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations have already been in consultation in reference to the bill which has just been referred to that committee, and I am directed to report it favorably and to ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill just reported. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. WARREN. I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming will be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 1, after line 11, under the head of "Senate," it is proposed to insert:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR RANSDELL.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, on November 10 last in New York, at the meeting of the National Merchant Marine Association held at the Grand Central Palace, the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] made a very instructive and interesting address relative to aid for shipping. I ask unanimous consent that his address may be printed in the RECORD in the regular 8-point type.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type as follows:

"To the members of the National Merchant Marine Association and to the other friends of the American merchant marine here to-night, I want to express, with all the emphasis in my power, my firm conviction that the problem of American shipping can not properly be regarded as a partisan issue, and that to treat it on the basis of politics will be disastrous not only to the merchant marine but to the Nation as well.

"Our shipping is no more a Republican or a Democratic institution than our Army or our Navy, to each of which it constitutes an indispensable adjunct held in reserve. It can no more be dispensed with than they can. It is not a luxury but a national necessity, for in it are combined a weapon of defense for the American Nation and an instrument to safeguard American industry.

"No matter what party might have been in power during the war, an expanded merchant marine must have been provided. No matter what party is in power now, our new-born merchant marine must be maintained. For just as no party truly representative of the American people could have shirked the responsibility of meeting the war need of providing ships to protect our fighting forces, so no party with the interests of the Nation at heart can now shirk the responsibility of keeping our flag on the seas.

"It was under a Democratic administration that the millions of tons of ships we now have were built. It is under a Republican administration that their future must be provided for. And if the American merchant marine fails, if it is abandoned and our place on the seas is surrendered to foreigners, together with our control of our own commerce, such a result must bring discredit to the Democracy that fathered the fleet, as well as to the Republicans that adopted it.

"I need not emphasize to you that failure is inevitable unless prompt steps are taken to equip our merchant marine so that the increasingly successful competition of foreigners can be met. Following the war the bulk of our imports and exports was carried in American ships, whereas to-day two-thirds of our overseas trade is transported by foreign vessels. In this change are reflected the steps whereby other nations, with their cheaper built and cheaper operated ships, aided by national support, have taken our carrying trade away from us. Our elimination as a commercial sea power of importance is inevitable unless vigorous legislation is promptly enacted that will enable us to regain our rightful place on the seas.

"Legislation designed to meet the situation has been prepared and is awaiting action by Congress. It provides for American shipping what every other maritime nation of importance has given to its merchant marine—subsidization. In addition, other aids are specified, calculated not only to benefit the ship and the shipper but the manufacturer, merchant, farmer, labor, and the Nation as a whole.

"I hear it stated from time to time that the Democratic Party can not support a plan of subsidy because the policies of the party are fundamentally opposed to such a policy. History, however, shows us that the very reverse is true. Under the early shipping policies of the Democracy the American merchant marine was developed to a point of efficiency and power beyond the trade fleets of all other nations. Under the laws framed by the founders of the Republic we had discriminating duties in favor of goods carried in American vessels, and as a result of these we transported nine-tenths of our exports and imports under our own flag for many years. Just before the late war, however, conditions had become exactly reversed, and it was the foreigner who carried the nine-tenths of our ocean commerce.

"What had happened? In the period from 1828 to 1850 we gradually gave up discriminations against the vessels of those nations which agreed not to discriminate against us. And then, when our hands were tied, foreign nations began to take up effectively the subsidization of their own vessels and our sea power began to wane.

"It was the Democracy which stepped into the breach at this crisis in American shipping affairs and initiated the American policy of ship subsidies. Two southern statesmen began it—Senator Thomas Butler King, of Georgia, and Senator Thomas J. Rusk, of Texas. Both advocated annual appropriations for the carrying of mails and the encouragement of American steamship building and navigation. President Polk stood strongly for this policy, and in 1845 and 1847 Congress passed legislation to this end. As to the effectiveness of this step inaugurated by the Democratic Party let me offer some Republican testimony from the majority report of the Merchant Marine Commission of 1904–5. That body was appointed by Congress and headed by the late Senator Gallinger. The report says:

"As a result of this enlightened statesmanship, the United States from 1850 onward for several years built more ocean steamships than Great Britain did, and better steamships, superior in size, speed, power, and commercial value. * * * The national policy thus approved would doubtless have continued unbroken to the present day but for the fierce and deplorable sectional quarrel that immediately preceded the Civil War. * * * In the white heat of this quarrel the mail subventions were withdrawn and the North Atlantic steamships, struggling hard with subsidized British rivals, were abandoned.

"The report continues—

"It is sometimes said that this national effort to create a steam fleet by mail subventions failed of its purpose. But it failed only because the effort was given up in the very crisis of the contest. A few years more would probably have made our steamships as securely masters of the North Atlantic as our packet ships and clipper ships had been before them.

"This tribute to subsidization, penned nearly 20 years ago, has an even greater bearing to-day than then, for now we have a mighty nucleus in hand for a mighty fleet. The ships are here, but they must be vested with competitive power before it is too late. Support of subsidy will not be an abandonment of Democratic policies but a renewal of the very ones on which the American merchant marine was set forth on a voyage to sea supremacy that ended with the goal in sight, and only then because the sailing orders were canceled. Let us not make this mistake again."

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I have a communication from the National Board of Farm Organizations transmitting certain resolutions adopted by that organization on the subject referred to in the address which has just been ordered printed in the RECORD. I ask that the communication may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C.,
November 21, 1922.

SENATOR DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR FLETCHER: The National Board of Farm Organizations has taken a very strong position on the so-called ship subsidy measure. A copy of our resolutions against this bill is inclosed herewith.

Respectfully yours,

NATIONAL BOARD OF FARM ORGANIZATIONS,
By CHAS. A. LYMAN, Secretary.

REPORT OF MEETING OCTOBER 11, 12, 13, 1922.

NATIONAL BOARD FARM ORGANIZATIONS,
Washington, D. C., October 19, 1922.

SHIP SUBSIDY OPPOSED BY NATIONAL BOARD OF FARM ORGANIZATIONS.

Ship subsidy in general and ship subsidy in particular as embodied in the Jones-Greene bill H. R. 12021 are emphatically opposed by the National Board of Farm Organizations.

Clear-cut opposition to the ship subsidy bill is expressed in the resolution adopted by the semiannual conference of the National Board of Farm Organizations, held at its headquarters, 1751 Eye Street NW., Washington, D. C., October 11–13. The resolution reads as follows:

"Whereas it is apparent that the question of granting subsidies to our merchant shipping will soon be brought to a vote in Congress; and

"Whereas the farmers of the United States have been traditionally opposed to the granting of such subsidies; and

"Whereas the plan embodied in the Jones-Greene bill, which is now under consideration, contains many provisions that are extremely objectionable and would, in our opinion, be detrimental to the best interest of the country as a whole, if enacted: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That this body record an emphatic protest against the passage of this proposed legislation."

This opposition to the ship subsidy bill confirms the position taken by the directors of the National Board of Farm Organizations in regularly called session, July 5–6, in which it was stated that "the board desires emphatically to go on record against the ship subsidy bill, known as H. R. 12021." The resolution adopted at that time, in part, stated:

"Wherever bona fide groups of organized farmers have assembled in the past to consider this long-agitated question of ship subsidy the sentiment against it has been overwhelming; and during the recent months as farmers have been learning of this particular measure their voices have been raised against it more forcibly that ever.

"In addition to being opposed in principle to subsidizing private shippers or shipping corporations we wish to point out a few of the many objectionable features of the bill.

"Unprecedented and unwarranted autocratic powers are vested in the Shipping Board, as may be gathered from the fact that it is not required to make any financial accounting to Congress or the President, while at the same time it is permitted to sell Government-owned ships at private sale without competitive bidding.

"Ships costing several billions of dollars can and probably will be sold at 10 cents on the dollar, it is estimated. We shall lend over $100,000,000 at 2 per cent interest to recondition these ships when sold, and then pay the owners in round numbers, $150,000,000 in subsidies besides in the next few years.

The National Board of Farm Organizations protests the contemplated program, the effect of which can only end in disaster to the Nation. We earnestly request Congress to reject the measure."

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I wish to introduce a concurrent resolution and to be permitted to make a brief statement relative thereto. Yesterday in the message of the President——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator at this point?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. NORRIS. Is the resolution which the Senator submits a Senate resolution?

Mr. CARAWAY. It is a concurrent resolution.

Mr. NORRIS. I was going to ask, if it is a Senate resolution, that the Senator withhold it until the present order before the Senate may be completed.

Mr. CARAWAY. I will take only a moment of the time of the Senate.

Yesterday the President in his message asked that the Congress which he convened in extraordinary session should disregard the expressed wishes of the people as disclosed in the recent election and pass a ship subsidy bill. He says:

In individual exchanges of opinion not a few in House or Senate have expressed personal sympathy with the purpose of the bill and then uttered a discouraging doubt about the sentiment of their constituencies.

The President then says it would be discouraging—I am not quoting him literally, but in effect—if the Congress should heed a mandate from the people and refuse to pass legislation which was desired by certain interests. That is in effect the statement of the President which appears in his address in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday.

The President's exact language is as follows:

Having discussed in detail the policy and provisions of the pending bill when previously addressing you, I forbear a repetition now. In individual exchanges of opinion not a few in House or Senate have expressed personal sympathy with the purposes of the bill and then uttered a discouraging doubt about the sentiment of their constituencies. It would be most discouraging if a measure of such transcending national importance must have its fate depend on geographical, occupational, professional, or partisan objections. Frankly, I think it loftier statesmanship to support and commend a policy designed to effect the larger good to the Nation than merely to record the too hasty impressions of a constituency.

With that idea in view, Mr. President, I present a resolution expressing the sense of the Senate, the House concurring, that Members who have been repudiated by their constituencies should not by their votes attempt to fasten upon the people legislation which the people themselves at the polls have tried to repudiate.

In this connection permit me to say that for those Members of the Senate who go out, either because they were not candidates for reelection or because their people chose others in their stead, I have nothing but the kindest feeling, and I present the concurrent resolution not to reflect upon them or upon the ninety-odd Members of the House who were left at home by the will of the sovereign people, but to call attention to the wrongfulness of trying to pass through the Congress at an extraordinary session legislation that the people have sought to prevent. It was not the intention of the framers of the Constitution that legislation should be jammed through Congress after the general election and before the convening of the Congress elected in the November elections.

The length of time allotted discloses, if no other argument were available, that the expectation of the framers of the Constitution was that the legislation enacted in the short session of Congress should be merely routine legislation, such as the passing of appropriation bills and measures of that kind. Now, with an adverse mandate from the people against the proposed ship subsidy bill, the President calls Congress in extraordinary session and, in effect, says to its Members, "Do not regard the mandate of the people; listen to me. The people have already ordered your retirement to private life; the only hope you may entertain to continue on the Federal pay roll is an appointment, and the only man who can make that appointment is the President of the United States. Therefore, disregard the mandate of the people; jam through this legislation; fasten upon the backs of the American people $100,000,000 annually in subsidies and then look for help to the Executive, who alone can keep you from being compelled to earn a living as a private citizen." That is what the President's utterances mean; that is what the President was trying to say in as diplomatic language as the President knows how to say it—"Disregard the people; they have already repudiated you; look to me; the power yet rests in my hands to reward you if you hear my voice and disregard the voice of the people. A ship subsidy for my friends and an appointment for you."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Without discussing the question whether it would be better for the country and wiser that the old Congress should not legislate upon general subjects after the election of a new Congress and before the new Congress has qualified to legislate, what can the Senator cite to sustain his statement——

Mr. CARAWAY. That we have a constitutional right to forbid them to do it?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No. If the Senator will be kind enough to wait until I frame my question——

Mr. CARAWAY. I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought he was through.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What authority can the Senator cite to substantiate his statement that it was the intention of the framers of the Constitution that the old Congress, some Members of which had been defeated, should be limited in their power to the passage of appropriation bills only and should not engage in any other legislation?

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, well, the length of time——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; the Senator said, if I understood him correctly, that the framers of the Constitution never intended that the old Congress should legislate upon anything but appropriation bills.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is exactly what I said.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I want to know what authority the Senator can quote as to the intention of the framers of the Constitution in that respect.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator asks me a question and then will not let me answer it because he is so anxious to repeat it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Oh, no; the Senator has all the time there is to answer it.

Mr. CARAWAY. Not so long as the Senator is alive, because he will take most of it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have yielded the floor.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator did not happen to have it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator yielded to me.

Mr. CARAWAY. I referred, Mr. President, to the brief duration of the short session. The President himself realized that fact and dared not wait until the first Monday in December, when by law and under the Constitution the old Congress would reconvene, but did what no other President ever did in the history of the country, called Congress into a third session in order that they might pass this legislation in the present Congress, for he knows, and every man who may vote for this unholy subsidy knows, that if the time shall slip by until the Congress that was elected by the people last November may have an opportunity to pass upon it Congress will repudiate it. It does not need any argument to show that it was not intended that this Congress should do it. The life of the present Congress is so limited that even the President and the framers of the ship subsidy measure knew they could not pass it in the regular session of Congress, and so the President called this extraordinary session.

The concurrent resolution goes a little further, Mr. President. It suggests that chairmen of various committees out of harmony with the mandate of the people should not longer continue to be chairmen of those committees and obstruct the will of the people. This is a representative form of government; we hold our commissions from the people, and we have absolutely no moral right to vote contrary to their wishes, if they have had an opportunity at the polls to express their wishes. The President's entreaty that Senators and Representatives should disregard this mandate, I think, makes it opportune—indeed, imperative—that the Senate should say to him that we recognize the people are our masters and not the President of these United States, and that he has no power, no moral right, to absolve us from our obligation to the people, and should not ask us to betray the people and listen to him in order that he may fasten upon the people legislation that he knows the people repudiated on the 7th day of November, 1922. If this be not true, let this ship subsidy bill rest until the Congress that was elected in 1922 shall have an opportunity to express its views.

Why, even Senator Newberry—the man who paid the highest price for a seat that ever a seat in the Senate brought—had the good taste to say, when repudiated by the people of Michigan by the rejection of his colleague, who had supported his contention, that he had been repudiated by the people and that he ought not to participate longer in the making of legislation when his people did not want him to do it, and he resigned. Should other men have less consideration for the wishes of the people than Senator Newberry, who undertook to buy a seat in the Senate?

Mr. President, I presume that by ordinary parliamentary procedure the concurrent resolution would go to the Committee on the Judiciary; but I wish to ask that it be sent to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. [Laughter.] I wish to say for the consideration of the Senators who laughed, because they did not know what they laughed about, that if the concurrent resolution goes to the Committee on the Judiciary I have every reason to believe that it will slumber there, as some other resolutions that I introduced found a morgue there; and I should like to have the Senate itself pass upon this one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there be objection, the concurrent resolution will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 29) was read and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

Whereas this is a representative government speaking for and interpreting the will of the people of the United States as expressed at the polls; and

Whereas no Representative in either branch of Congress has the moral right to support or vote for any measure which the people by their votes have repudiated; and

Whereas certain proposed legislation affecting a fundamental change in our economic and commercial policy is now recommended by the Executive for consideration by Congress; and

Whereas this proposed legislation has failed to receive the approval of the voters as evidenced by the elections recently held; and

Whereas Congress has been called into extraordinary session for the purpose of passing this legislation which the people have by imperative and unmistakable mandate repudiated; and

Whereas a Congress which adopts legislation in defiance of a popular mandate to the contrary would perpetrate an act of usurpation; and

Whereas many advocates of the ship subsidy bill in the present Congress have been rejected by emphatic majorities by their constituents; and

Whereas it is unwise to place in the hands of rejected public servants the power to adopt fundamental legislation; and

Whereas a sense of official propriety would suggest to the defeated Members the unwisdom of participating in legislation which, if enacted, would materially affect fundamental questions of public policy: Therefore be it

Resolved, I. That it is the sense of the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring) that all Members defeated at the recent polls abstain from voting on any but routine legislation, such as necessary supply bills, motions to adjourn, or motions to recess, and such other legislation as does not involve any material change of national policy.

II. That chairmen of committees, not in sympathy with the people's wishes as expressed at the polls and who have an important effect on legislation, resign from their respective chairmanships so their places may be filled by those who are known to be willing to carry into legislative effect the mandate of the people as expressed at the polls on the 7th day of November, 1922.

III. That the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring) reaffirm their readiness to bow to the people's will, when expressed at the polls, and declare that the vote of want of confidence in the leaders which has been registered shall not be disregarded.

INVESTIGATION OF CERTAIN OIL LEASES.

Mr. WALSH of Montana submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 368), which was read:

Whereas under the act of Congress, approved February 25, 1920, entitled "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain," it is provided:

Sec. 27. That no person, association, or corporation, except as herein provided, shall take or hold more than one coal, phosphate, or sodium lease during the life of such lease in any one State; no person, association, or corporation shall take or hold, at one time, more than three oil or gas leases granted hereunder in any one State, and not more than one lease within the geologic structure of the same producing oil or gas field; no corporation shall hold any interest as a stockholder of another corporation in more than such number of leases; and no person or corporation shall take or hold any interest or interests as a member of an association or associations or as a stockholder of a corporation or corporations holding a lease under the provisions hereof, which, together with the area embraced in any direct holding of a lease under this act, or which, together with any other interest or interests as a member of an association or associations or as a stockholder of a corporation or corporations holding a lease under the provisions hereof, for any kind of mineral leased hereunder, exceeds in the aggregate an amount equivalent to the maximum number of acres of the respective kinds of minerals allowed to any one lessee under this act. Any interests held in violation of this act shall be forfeited to the United States by appropriate proceedings instituted by the Attorney General for that purpose in the United States district court for the district in which the property, or some part thereof, is located, except that any ownership or interest forbidden in this act which may be acquired by descent, will, judgment, or decree may be held for two years and not longer after its acquisition: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit sections 18, 18a, 19, and 22, or to prevent any number of lessees under the provisions of this act from combining their several interests so far as may be necessary for the purposes of constructing and carrying on the business of a refinery, or of establishing and constructing as a common carrier a pipe line or lines of railroads to be operated and used by them jointly in the transportation of oil from their several wells, or from the wells of other lessees under this act, or the transportation of coal: Provided further, That any combination for such purpose or purposes shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior on application to him for permission to form the same: And provided further, That if any of the lands or deposits leased under the provisions of this act shall be subleased, trusteed, possessed, or controlled by any device permanently, temporarily, directly, indirectly, tacitly, or in any manner whatsoever, so that they form part of, or are in anywise controlled by any combination in the form of an unlawful trust, with consent of lessee, or form the subject of any contract or conspiracy in restraint of trade in the mining or selling of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, or sodium entered into by the lessee, or any agreement or understanding, written, verbal, or otherwise to which such lessee shall be a party, of which his or its output is to be or become the subject, to control the price or prices thereof or of any holding of such lands by any individual, partnership, association, corporation, or control, in excess of the amounts of lands provided in this act, the lease thereof shall be forfeited by appropriate court proceedings; and

Whereas it is currently reported that notwithstanding the provisions of the said act above quoted, by sundry devices certain individuals, acting in concert through the same or separate corporate organizations, or otherwise, actually, though they may not nominally, hold oil or gas leases issued under the said act in number greater than three in each of several States and greater than one within the geologic structure of each of a number of producing oil or gas fields, and that such interests in fact exercise control over the greater portion of the output of a number of such fields, in so far as the same issues from lands leased under the said act, the number of leases covering lands in such fields, being greatly in excess of three: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys or any subcommittee it may designate for the purposes be, and it hereby is, authorized and directed:

1. To inquire—

(a) Into all leases issued under the said act, to whom the same were issued, to whom the same or any rights thereunder were assigned or otherwise transferred, and the members of any association or the stockholders of any corporation acquiring such leases or any rights thereunder, at the time and since the same were acquired, with the business relation, if any, between any such associations or corporations, and how far, if at all, any two or more are controlled by one and the same management by a common stock ownership or otherwise.

(b) The area embraced in such leases and the State and geologic structure within which the lands embraced therein lie.

(c) Any contracts entered into by the holders of any such leases or any interest therein for the disposition of any oil or gas issuing from the lands embraced therein and the various parties through which the same or the products thereof pass before reaching the consumer, with the relation of any such parties to each other.

2. To report to the Senate the facts developed by such inquiry; and

3. To recommend such action by Congress or the executive departments, or both, as shall to the committee seem appropriate to accomplish the purpose of the statute above referred to and to prevent evasion of its provisions.

The said committee is hereby authorized to sit and perform its duties at such times and places as it deems necessary or proper and to require the attendance of witnesses by subpœnas or otherwise; to require the production of books, papers, and documents, and to employ stenographers, at a cost not exceeding $1.25 per printed page. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses and sign subpœnas for witnesses; and every person duly summoned before said committee or any subcommittee thereof who refuses or fails to obey the process of said committee or appears and refuses to answer questions pertinent to said investigation shall be punished as prescribed by law. The expenses of said investigation shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers of the committee or subcommittee, signed by the chairman and approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, those of us who were in some measure responsible for the legislation referred to conceived, at the time it was enacted, that by the provisions incorporated in the resolution we had insured the people of the country against the monopolization of these valuable lands of the Government and made certain that the interests which would be acquired under it would be distributed widely throughout the country, affording the people much-needed competition in the matter of the products of crude oil. Notwithstanding that, it is currently reported, as recited in the resolution, that at least in a number of the Western States a complete control exists in a great corporation and its allied interests of not only these Government leases but of the entire production of crude oil in this section of the country.

In a report made by the Federal Trade Commission to the Congress under date of June 30, 1921, certain conclusions are recited, among which are the following:

1. The geographic isolation of the Wyoming oil fields with reference to the prolific midcontinent and California fields and the absence of pipe-line transportation to the large consuming centers makes it necessary for the Wyoming producer to sell his crude petroleum to local refining companies.

2. There is greater concentration in the control of the production of crude petroleum in the Wyoming oil fields than in any other field in the United States.

3. From 1917–1919 the Midwest Refining interests and the Ohio Oil Co. controlled from 93 to 97 per cent of the Wyoming production.

The most prolific field in the State of Wyoming at the present time is the Salt Creek field. I am advised that it embraces an area of some 22,000 acres, of which no more than 2,000 acres, at the outside, are held in private ownership, the other 20,000 acres being held under leases issued under the provisions of the act of 1920. If, then, Mr. President, the Midwest Oil Co. controls from 93 to 97 per cent of the oil production of the State of Wyoming, the conclusion seems irresistible that it controls very much more of the production of the Salt Creek field than it is conceived it could control if the provisions of the act of 1920 were carried out according to the spirit of that law.

The situation is not much different in my own State, and the Salt Creek field in the State of Wyoming is adjacent to the Montana oil territory. The railroad commission of the State of Montana, acting as a public-service commission for my State, made complaint some time ago to the Federal Trade Commission of the exorbitant prices to which our people were subject in purchasing gasoline. It appeared that notwithstanding Montana had become an important producer of crude oil and the adjacent territory in the State of Wyoming was producing fabulously, the people of Montana were obliged to pay for gasoline a higher price than that paid by the people of any other State in the Union.

The subject was investigated by the Federal Trade Commission and the facts found as I have recited them. In the investigation by it conducted, though not directly in line with that contemplated in the resolution, the Federal Trade Commission found, among other things, that the production of crude oil and the refining of gasoline in the States of Montana and Wyoming are controlled by the Midwest Refining Co., either directly or through its subsidiary or affiliated companies. Montana is producing now from three different fields—the Cat Creek field, the Soap Creek field, and the Kevin field—the Cat Creek field being the field first brought in and up to the present time the most prolific producer. A large portion of the area within that field had passed into private ownership before it was conceived that it was valuable for the oil contained therein. But something over 10 per cent, at least, of the production now issues from lands which are operated under Government leases.

I shall not detain the Senate at this time to discuss the actual situation, but it is not substantially different from that recited in the report of the Federal Trade Commission. It seems inconceivable, Mr. President, that that company can control the production of these fields unless in some way or other it has acquired interests in violation of the act of 1920.

Accordingly, Mr. President, I feel that the Senate ought to be advised as to what the facts are, that it may be guided and governed in its future attitude toward this law. The resolution, of course, must go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but I believe that it would be advisable that a preliminary inquiry should be had by the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, and I shall ask that it be referred to that committee for its consideration. Upon the coming in of the report of that committee I shall ask the further reference of it.

Mr. SMOOT. Then it will have to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, if the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys decide that they will go ahead with it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

A FARMERS' RURAL CREDIT BANK—WHO SHALL CONTROL IT, FARMERS OR BANKERS?

Mr. LADD. Mr. President, there has come to my attention a copy of a program of the forty-second annual meeting of the Academy of Political Science, to be held in Hotel Astor, New York City, on the 23d and 24th of this month. According to the program this annual meeting is to be given over to the discussion of the money problem. I make no apology for taking the time of the Senate to make certain observations at this time, because I believe there are certain movements going on that are of tremendous import to the people of this country. They demand discussion now; a little delay and it will be too late.

First, I desire to call to the attention of the Senate the personnel of the committee on program and arrangements for this forty-second annual meeting.

Samuel McCune Lindsay is chairman ex officio. Professor Lindsay is an author and educator on economic and financial matters, and his activities date back many years. In 1892 he was a special agent of the Senate Finance Committee to report on wholesale prices in Europe. His writings place him on record as to his financial theories, beliefs, and alignments.

E. E. Agger is another educator connected with Columbia University.

Irving T. Bush, of New York, of the Bush Terminal Co. and other Bush interests, is a business man with connections of great international trade interests.

Nicholas Murray Butler, the president of Columbia University, has been sufficiently eulogized on this floor, and very little speculation is necessary to determine as to his sympathies and connections.

Waddill Catchings, of 60 Wall Street, New York City, formerly in the export department of J. P. Morgan & Co. and now of important connections in the iron and steel industry, was a member of the advisory council of administration of war labor of the Department of Labor and was chairman of the war committee of the chamber of commerce.

Frederick Cunliffe-Owen, connected with the New York Tribune.

Will H. Hays, a lawyer, of Sullivan, Ind., who became distinguished when he was appointed chairman of the Republican National Committee, and later official ...nsor of the motion-picture industry.

J. W. Jenks, an economist whose views and affiliations are very well known.

Joseph French Johnson, formerly financial editor of the Chicago Tribune, and rather prominently identified with the now more or less discredited monetary commission.

E. W. Kemmerer, another economist who was connected with the monetary commission, and who holds the distinction of having been in 1917 financial adviser to the Government of Mexico. The financial affairs of Mexico are still in a very bad condition, I believe. They probably will be so long as Mexico depends upon the international bankers of Wall Street to set her house in order.

BIG FINANCIERS INTERESTED.

Thomas W. Lamont, another bulwark of the house of Morgan.

Ogden L. Mills, who was a member of the Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry, and who probably obtained his experience as a practical farmer in connection with the handling of his affairs in the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, the Lackawanna Steel Co., the Mergenthaler Linotype Co., Shredded Wheat Co., Crex Carpet Co., the New York Trust Co., and various other matters in which his millions are interested. As a practical farmer, conversant with the needs of the farmer, he should be amply qualified—from the bankers' viewpoint.

George W. Perkins, jr., the son of another financier of J. P. Morgan distinction, and known to the International Harvester Co., United States Steel Corporation, great maritime and railway interests, and various other of the biggest interests in the country.

L. S. Rowe, the popular head of the Pan American Union, whom the Washington newspapers' society columns note as being very busily engaged in the giving and attending of interesting dinners and other social events.

Henry R. Seager, another economist—spelled in capital letters—connected with Columbia University.

E. R. A. Seligman, another professor and economist, whose hand has been laid heavily upon the American people and about whom more will be said later.

FEDERAL RESERVE INTERESTED.

Benjamin Strong, the governor of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, and who figured so prominently in the hearings before the Joint Committee of Agricultural Inquiry, and who has the courage to believe that his bank is not a governmental but a private institution.

Frank A. Vanderlip, about whom volumes could be written. We will have to content ourselves with saying that the records will show that he first came into prominence while holding a fiduciary position as Assistant Secretary of the United States Treasury. He negotiated a most questionable sale of the United States customhouse to the National City Bank of New York, of which he subsequently became president. The unrefuted statements in the public press prove this to have been a most unconscionable transaction, in which Frank A. Vanderlip, as Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, acted in the interest of the National City Bank and against the interests of the Government and the people of the United States. Since this occurrence he has consistently aligned himself with the money power.

Elliot Wadsworth, now Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, in charge of foreign loans and railroad advances. We can not help but sympathize with the poor railroads; they will not have had enough of advances until the vaults of the Treasury have been turned over to them.

THE FEDERAL RESERVE AND WALL STREET FOR THE FARMERS.

Paul M. Warburg, a prince of the house of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., another Money Trust firm of international bankers. It is asserted Warburg is the father of the present financial system known as the Federal reserve system. He is the gentleman who devised the trap into which was led the entire American Nation; both the Democratic and Republican Parties were entangled in the meshes of the international bankers, and they succeeded in writing into law a financial system that is rapidly forging the bonds of debt slavery upon the American people, and these two organizations, having been parties to the crime, are now silent and wedded to the system. Warburg even had the nerve and courage to boast before a Senate committee that he had been successful in his plans.

H. Parker Willis, another economist, who was pushed to the front in the enactment of the Federal reserve act, and who translated onto paper and defended the ideas promulgated by Paul M. Warburg.

There are a few others on this committee about whom I have no special information.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that anyone who had given any serious study to economic conditions in this country would find no hesitancy in reaching the conclusion that this committee on program and arrangements—with the possible exception of a few who might be mingled in for "trimmings"—is constituted of minds entirely in accordance with the banking interests. Any program arranged by this committee for the discussion of "the money problem" would naturally be arranged with a viewpoint of developing the ideas of the big bankers. There is one satisfactory and interesting observation, however, and that is that the bankers themselves realize that there is a money problem up for discussion in this country. They are not dilatory in their preparation to meet it, but seem to be feverishly trying to direct it into channels of which they approve. In view of the statement of the bankers upon the conclusion of the recent meeting of the American Bankers' Association, held in New York City, that the bankers were ready to lead the people, it is not improper to presume that this conference to be held this week is but one of their bids for leadership.

There is, however, Mr. President, one particular phase of this proposed conference that is of particular interest at this time, and it is for that reason that I am taking this opportunity to discuss it. I refer to the third session of the conference, to be held Friday afternoon at 2.30 p. m., in the north ballroom of Hotel Astor, and the topic for discussion will be "The agricultural credit problem." One would not expect to hear much of the language of the real dirt farmer amid the splendors of the north ballroom, especially when those who gather around the board possess such illustrious financial antecedents and connections.

It is, of course, not contended that the big banking interests of the country do not have a right to gather in such a discussion, but those who have the real interests of the farmer at heart also have the right to warn him against accepting such advocates for their leadership.

SAVING THE FARMER FOR THE BANKS.

Let us notice for a moment the program for this third session. It is to be presided over by Edwin R. A. Seligman, already referred to. The program is as follows:

1. Introductory address of the presiding officer.

2. Agricultural financing.—Eugene Meyer, jr., managing director War Finance Corporation, Washington, D. C.; SYDNEY ANDERSON, public business permitting, Congressman from Minnesota, chairman Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry.

3. Fall in agricultural prices, causes and remedies.—George E. Roberts, vice president National City Bank, New York City.

4. Should the farmer have additional credits to enable him to hold his crops for better prices?—Jesse E. Pope, Washington, D. C.

5. Discussion.—Thomas P. Gore, former United States Senator from Oklahoma. Every cloud has a silver lining, and in this connection we are heartened that the name of former Senator Gore appears among the galaxy of intellectuals on the program. We are glad to learn that the farmers will have a friend in court and that their cause will be better and more favorably known because of his presence at the conference.

WARBURG, SELIGMAN, AND FARMERS.

Mr. President, according to that eminent authority on big financiers, Mr. B. C. Forbes, in his book, Men Who Are Making America, at page 403, it was in the home of Edwin R. A. Seligman where the decision was made that Paul M. Warburg should publish his views on the central bank idea, and that the propaganda should be started for the purpose of writing into our laws a financial system based upon the central bank idea as the ideal corner stone. This decision was made at a time when the country was in the throes of the financial stringency of 1907, and when the people were declaiming against the money power centralized in Wall Street—and whose ideas were to be put forth as the basis for the new currency system? Those of Paul M. Warburg, a descendant of international bankers, schooled and trained for an international banker, imported from Germany for the purpose of giving expression to the evolution of the international bankers' idea of a currency system, and a man who having come here in 1902 and become a member of that powerful firm of international banker Kuhn, Loeb & Co., did not file his citizenship papers until he was ready to take his fight before the public, and then did not become a citizen until 1911.

BANK CREDITS AND PAUPERS.

What happened? In an attempt to distract the American people and satisfy their demands for monetary reform the monetary commission was authorized and sent abroad to investigate European systems and report to Congress a monetary plan. The commission went abroad and proceeded to interview bankers and financiers and investigate European banking systems, but they did not investigate the economic condition of the peoples who lived under the domination of these banking systems; neither did they report to Congress a monetary measure, but a bank credit measure. They found ideal banking systems, from the bankers' viewpoint and from a standpoint of banking prosperity, but they failed to show the pauperizing effects of those systems upon the peoples who endured them.

The next step was the Aldrich report, which was secretly written on Jekyll Island, and in which Mr. Warburg had such a prominent part. The Aldrich bill followed, and the Democrats rose in arms and defeated it. They deservedly received the plaudits of the Nation for their fight against the Aldrich bill and for the magnificent stand they took against the central-bank idea. The people rewarded them by placing them in power, with the mandate to effect financial reform, and that mandate was clearly against any such idea as embraced in the Aldrich bill. They conducted the Pujo investigation and exposed, in part, the Money Trust, and that disclosure showed that the firm of Paul M. Warburg—Kuhn, Loeb & Co.—was declared to be a member of that Money Trust. Notwithstanding that fact, they immediately nestled to their bosoms this self-same Warburg that had been the directing hand behind the Aldrich bill. The Aldrich bill was worked over, camouflaged, and disguised and placed before the people as a great achievement and as the means of emancipation of the people from financial slavery. The Republicans could not, had they desired, fight the measure effectually, because they were compelled to recognize the fact that it was the same proposition they had sponsored in the Aldrich bill. The result was that the voices of opposition were silenced, and the international bankers had captured both of the big political parties.

I do not know that the throwing over of George Harvey, with sympathies for the house of Morgan, and the taking on the ship of Paul M. Warburg, of the house of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., by the Wilson forces had anything to do with the capture of both parties, but I have long had my suspicions that it did have a great deal to do with it. It has long been rumored that there are two groups of the big international bankers who are continually battling silently against each other for financial domination, and there are many indications that such is true. However, that does not mean to say that they are at variance as to the system to be used, or that there is difference of opinion when it comes to the necessary legislation for their operations. In these matters they usually present a solid front, save where it obviously would be prudent to adopt a different method of procedure. Obtaining authorization for their system through legislative channels is entirely different from a fight between themselves for control of the system.

WHO CAN TELL?

All of this talk about who is the author of our present financial system is principally chatter. Some day I may deem it advisable to say something to this body about Mr. McAdoo and his connections with Kuhn, Loeb & Co.

But back to this proposed meeting in New York. We do know that Edwin R. A. Seligman, who is to preside over this rural-credit discussion, was one of the first men to figure in the plans for "putting across" the system, and he has faithfully awaited its beck and call ever since.

Then the program provides that we shall get some more instruction for the farmer from Eugene Meyer, jr., head of the War Finance Corporation, and another Wall Street manipulator. There are many indications that Mr. Meyer is greatly interested in the various cooperative movements throughout the country, and I have been informed that he has been in close cooperation with Mr. Aaron Sapiro, who has accomplished a great deal in the organization of these cooperatives, and is supposed to represent a great many of them as attorney, which representation affords a comfortable source of revenue. I have also been advised that Mr. Sapiro is very influential in obtaining aid for the cooperatives from the War Finance Corporation.

I would like to say this, Mr. President, the farmers have a great opportunity for helping themselves through the cooperative organizations; I have devoted a great deal of my life to a study of the problems of the farmer and I have long ago come to the conclusion that if he is to realize any permanent relief or aid through the cooperative movement he must be careful of his leaders. He must be sure to always keep control of his organization. Forbid the time may ever come when the unseen hand of Wall Street or any special group of financiers has the control of organized farmers in their grasp. If such come true, then their organization will prove a boomerang to come back and strike, a viper to curse and wound them in their adversity.

Then Mr. Roberts, of the great National City Bank, will also hand out some advice about the farmers; and so on, it goes.

Mr. President, I do not know whether or not this meeting proposes to go on record as favoring any special legislation, whether it will indorse a bill drawn by Mr. Meyer or one sponsored by Mr. Warburg or Mr. Roberts or anyone else. Perhaps they may now consider it inadvisable to do so.

I am convinced of this, however, that any recommendation they may make looking toward legislation for the farmer will be from the viewpoint of what is good for the bankers and not what is the best thing for the farmers.

According to the Washington Times, edition of November 21, 1922, on financial page, in an article by Harry Gusack:

Credit requirements of the live-stock industry as one phase of the rural-credits problem were discussed at a conference between Eugene Meyer, managing director of the War Finance Corporation, and a committee of the American National Livestock Association. The meeting probably will continue until to-morrow before a program adequate for that industry has been worked out to be included in the rural credit legislative program.

As a basis for the discussions, Mr. Meyer outlined three plans for farm financing as the basis for the rural-credits program. These are:

1. Provide financing through a centralized Government banking institute, operating with large Government capital and making loans somewhat as the War Finance Corporation has done—through branches or agencies.

2. Financing farm requirements through a number of financial corporations, each with moderate capital furnished partly by the Government, operating within a limited district, and relying upon its ability to sell bonds or debentures to the investing public in order to raise the necessary funds. Under this type of organization it is proposed to facilitate the sales of securities through tax exemption.

3. Take care of the financing of cooperative marketing organizations through existing financial machinery by modifying the laws and regulations governing the eligibility requirements of the Federal reserve system, and the financing of the live-stock industry by amending the national bank act so as to authorize the creation of federally chartered loan companies, operating with private capital under the supervision of the Comptroller of the Currency or the Federal reserve system.

Mr. President, all of these methods depend entirely upon the Federal reserve system for their success, and they can be defeated in their intended purposes by the power centralized in the 12 Federal reserve banks; and I might even say by the Second Federal Reserve Bank of New York alone, for that bank is, in practical effect, the central bank of the United States. It is also contended that it is now a private banking institution.

If either of these methods are adopted it will eventuate in further enslavement for the farmer and a pyramiding of more debts, when another period of "drastic deflation" could wipe out the remaining equities of the farmers.

However, it is not my purpose to discuss this phase of the situation at this time, but I intend to do so if either of the propositions reach this floor.

This is but further evidence to my mind, Mr. President, that a studied effort is now being made to get a well-fortified scheme brought before this Congress that will sail right through because it will have a long list of stereotyped indorsements behind it when it reaches Congress. As usual, the plan comes through some of the same old Wall Street crowd.

The fact that Mr. Meyer has received the indorsement of two administrations whose parties, according to the record, would seem to have surrendered to Wall Street on the money question, does not justify the farmers of this Nation in placing their destiny in his hands.

CONFIDENCE AND WALL STREET.

It is not very long to hark back to the time when there was a feeling in this country that Wall Street could not be depended upon to protect the best interests of the rank and file of the country. Now it appears that all leaders, all molders of legislative thought, to be considered dependable, must hail from Wall Street. There was a time when there would be many sincere and protesting voices raised against such a condition, but now there is silence where there should be indignation and wrath. Public officials seem to be taking the viewpoint that if there is a financial task to perform it must be done by some one of Wall Street ability and qualifications.

Will we ever learn? We have accepted the bankers' idea in this country long enough. They have always brought us to debts and hard times. The bankers' system has patently proved a failure. Will we continue to swear by it? When I say a failure, I mean a failure from the standpoint of the people. It has been an eminent success from the standpoint of the banker. Debts have piled up by the billions, and they continue to pile up, and they all bear interest, and the people pay the interest. While the banks and bankers are increasing the reserves and assets, the people are going more into debt. Our present financial system will never get us out, but will persistently mount the total of indebtedness. There is not a better illustration of that fact than the increase of mortgage indebtedness upon the farms of the United States since the operation of the Federal reserve act, and not a clearer illustration of the powers of that act than the results of drastic deflation in wiping out of equities in farms throughout the entire country.

SHALL WE PREDICT THE END?

Yet, with it all, we are content to rest on our oars and let the international bankers perfect their system. Not only that, but it is quite evident to me that there will be legislation offered to this body for the alleged purpose of giving the farmers a system of rural credits, and that such legislation will depend entirely upon the Federal reserve act for its success or failure. Mr. President, there could not be a more effectual way of abandoning the interests of the farmer and setting another trap for his enslavement.

Mr. President, evidently there will be some rural credit legislation offered to this body within a short time; I wish to place the farmers on guard at this time that if they are to get any legislation that will be of lasting benefit to them it must be on a basis of real money. No system of loaning of bank credits, or rural credits, or whatever allluring name may be offered, will serve to do anything else than to push the farmer further into the quagmire of debt.

It might also be added that if there is a persistent attempt to foist such a system upon the people of this country, there will be more than 18 new faces in this body during the Sixty-ninth Congress. The farmers are tired of being duped and fooled. They have a very good idea of what they want, and they are determined to have it.

Mr. President, what I have said to-day is not designed as destructive criticism nor is it aimed at those who would honestly endeavor to restore agriculture to a profitable basis. I have, however, endeavored to raise a warning voice against that type of class legislation too often enacted for the benefit of the little group of money and credit manipulators and at the expense of that larger group—the American farmers.

Banking and financial legislation secured in the past by this same group of men, together with their administration of the laws, are now responsible for the farmers' present deplorable condition whereby they, as a class, are in five short years reduced from reasonable prosperity and modest comfort to bankruptcy. These farmers must now resort, as other business men do, either to the Nelson cure or stagger under the load that will in the end completely crush them and drag down other business, including the bankers, with them.

Similar meetings to the one under discussion are now being held or planned for in other parts of the country, indicating that the bankers are about, as has been stated, to take the lead for better agriculture. Will they do so? I am sorry to say the signs as indicated by the past are not good. Unless the farmers are given constructive legislation and the control of their own banking and marketing affairs is left in their own hands, there will be worse than confusion, and if we adopt a system in place thereof which continues to exact a heavy tax from the producers for the benefit of the banker, the middleman, and the retailer, I predict it will not be satisfactory either to the farmer nor will it act as a panacea stimulating greater production, which means heavy losses to the producer, and the farmer will not be slow to discover the purport or to act in an effective manner as he is now being forced to do, not only for his own protection but likewise for the benefit of the consumer and that of all society and also of the State.

LIBERIAN LOAN.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 270) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a credit with the United States for the Government of Liberia.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, during the last session of Congress I offered to the joint resolution an amendment proposing an appropriation to provide for certain inspectors of locomotive boilers. It was, I think, generally agreed upon the part of Senators that the amendment should be adopted, but while the amendment was pending a deficiency appropriation bill was brought in and considered. An amendment providing for such an appropriation was adopted by the Senate to that bill, but in conference, I think on the day before the session of Congress adjourned, the amendment was stricken out. In view of those circumstances, I desire again to offer that amendment to the joint resolution.

It has been some time since the subject was considered, and I should like to examine the amendment. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] is familiar with the subject, and he made certain suggestions with respect to changing the amendment. I wish to obtain a copy of the amendment, and to prepare it so that it may be passed in proper form.

I ask the Senator from Kansas if he will be willing to let the joint resolution go over until to-morrow, in order that we may have an opportunity to look into the matter?

Mr. CURTIS. Can the Senator assure me that there will then be no debate on the amendment? The amendment was fully debated on a previous occasion.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not desire to say anything further in support of the amendment, for I think it was pretty generally agreed that it should be adopted.

Mr. CURTIS. If the amendment in the changed form in which it may be proposed will not lead to further debate, I shall be willing to let the joint resolution go over until to-morrow, for I should like to see the amendment prepared according to the recommendation of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the report of the Budget Bureau.

In reference to the suggested amendment I desire to say that previously, when the matter was under consideration, I asked the Senator from Mississippi to withdraw the amendment and to propose it to the appropriation bill. He very kindly agreed to delay consideration of the amendment until the deficiency bill should be under consideration. When the deficiency bill was taken up for consideration the amendment was attached to that bill, and I assured the Senator from Mississippi at that time that if the amendment were not retained, so far as I was personally concerned, I should not object to the amendment being offered to the pending measure. In view of that fact, I am perfectly willing—for I think such action will save time and we shall thereby get a better amendment—to let the pending joint resolution go over until to-morrow, if the Senator from Mississippi will assure me that, so far as he is concerned, there will be no further debate on the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not expect to debate the amendment at all, and I do not think there will be any debate on the amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. I understand that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] desires to say a few words in reference to another matter. As soon as he shall have concluded, I shall ask that the pending joint resolution be laid aside until to-morrow.

RESIGNATION OF SENATOR NEWBERRY.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I was unavoidably detained from the Senate on yesterday when the resignation of the former junior Senator from Michigan, Mr. Newberry, was presented or I should have then said what I intend now to say.

No more loyal American ever sat in the Senate of the United States than Senator Newberry. His patient, diligent, and efficient service, coupled with his unusual experience in the naval matters of the country, has been of distinct and conspicuous help.

Some day, Mr. President, the wrong which has been done to Senator Newberry and to his family will be generally recognized and will be righted, for the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], in the parting blow which I am sorry to say he saw fit to give to his retiring colleague yesterday, said one thing that was undoubtedly true, and that was that "the good common sense of the American people in the end generally prevails." I may add that in the end it always does prevail; and many of those who, for one motive or another, have joined in the unwarranted and unfair attacks upon Senator Newberry will come to recognize and acknowledge the injustice which they have done.

The frank, manly statement of the junior Senator from Michigan made upon this floor in connection with his case will be accepted as the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, and the American people will realize that in spite of all the unjust and unfounded propaganda which has been and is promulgated in the country the essential facts are that during the entire primary campaign in 1918 in Michigan, of which criticism has been made, Senator Newberry was not present in the State of Michigan, but was constantly, during the primary campaign as well as during the general campaign, in the service of his country in the Navy, and that the large amount of money that was spent in connection with the primary—$195,000—was collected and spent by a committee on its own authority and without Senator Newberry's knowledge or consent, and that not a dollar of the entire fund was furnished by him, and that every dollar was used for purposes of publicity, without taint of illegality or impropriety in its expenditure.

The problem in Michigan was to inform the citizens of that State of the things for which Senator Newberry stood as distinguished from the things which Mr. Henry Ford advocated—and there were thousands of patriotic, loyal citizens who believed then and believe now that the nomination of Mr. Ford would have been a national disaster.

It must be some satisfaction to the retiring Senator to know that when the conviction which sentenced him to the penitentiary upon the charge of having spent more than $3,750 finally came to be considered by the Supreme Court of the United States that tribunal unanimously set it aside as being founded upon mistaken interpretation of law and most unfair to Mr. Newberry, and by a majority vote declared unconstitutional the very law under which the action had been taken. It must be some satisfaction to him to know that the Senate, after a protracted hearing and recount of the ballots, determined his eligibility and his qualifications for the office; but no man can overlook the propaganda, continuous and insidious, damaging to the man and his family alike, that has created in the country an atmosphere as if there were something criminal or illegal or improper in the proceedings incident to the primary election in Michigan. There is not a shadow of foundation for any such judgment.

I say, Mr. President, that the time is coming when many of the men who have been strong and earnest in their attacks—for many of them are as fair men as are upon the floor of the Senate—will recognize the injustice which they have done to the junior Senator from Michigan, whose career before the election of 1918 and during that election and since that time in the Senate of the United States has been that of a conscientious, patriotic American, of signal ability and indefatigable diligence.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not care to recall a matter which I had supposed was closed, a matter which I think had better be regarded as concluded; but, as I am present in the Chamber, I am not quite willing to have the statements of the able Senator from Missouri go unchallenged.

I wholly disagree with the view which he takes of the matter, that this money was expended without the knowledge or consent of Mr. Newberry. I think the evidence is quite conclusive that it was expended both with his knowledge and with his consent. I should not mention this at all if it were not for the fact that the statement of the Senator goes into the RECORD, and should we who took the different view sit silent it might be regarded that we had changed our view with reference to that matter.

I think Mr. Newberry made just one mistake, and that was that he did not tender his resignation immediately after the Supreme Court passed upon the legality of the statute. He could have done so then with great propriety and gone back to his people for their view of the matter. I am of the opinion that in all probability he might have done so had he received the same advice then that he received after the election. But I do not care to go into the matter. I only wish to say, in a single sentence, that I think the record is conclusive as to the illegality of the expenditure of the money, and that the amount expended was intolerable. For Mr. Newberry individually I do not wish to speak harshly, but the system of politics which prevailed in his election is indefensible from the standpoint of law or of morals.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri is admirable in the trait that he is most loyal to his friends and that he is the last to forsake a cause. We once saw him stand by another. His name was Goldstein. And when the shroud that enwrapped Goldstein became too gold stained for even Lowden, whose agents had performed the operation, it was not so with the Senator. Aye, even after Goldstein had served notice upon those who sought to honor him that he would not accept the nomination, the distinguished Senator from Missouri stood adamant—defiant to the end. When others see that it is wise "to get out and from under," the Senator from Missouri remains constant and firm. His speech to-day is in keeping with his past record.

But I suppose the distinguished Senator from Missouri is about the only Senator who voted to seat Senator Newberry who feels a pang of sorrow over his resignation. Newberryism, which the people have come to understand to mean "the plundering of the people through the purchase of power," will not down. Like Banquo's ghost it will rise again, and it will haunt in future campaigns, as it has haunted in the last campaign, Senators who condemned by their votes the confession of an expenditure of the $195,000 for his election in Michigan and at the same time said, "We are going to seat you here. We want you to be one of us."

When the Senator casts his watchful eyes over the States that held senatorial elections on November 7 he will see that only two Senators who voted to seat Senator Newberry in the face of the facts, and who came up for reelection at that time, were returned. And both those by tremendously reduced majorities—majorities that permitted them only to squeeze in. All others who went before the people in that campaign and were compelled to answer the issue of Newberryism were swept from power. Their defeats answer the arguments of the Senator from Missouri better than any feeble expression that I might now utter. The people's wishes will prevail, and they have in this instance triumphed.

I am not going to be unkind by mentioning friends and distinguished colleagues who were dashed upon the sands of defeat in the recent storm because of the votes they cast for Newberry. Those who voted for him, and who have not yet gone before their constituents, can make two years from now further apologies for those votes. If the Senator from Missouri, and others of his way of thinking, desire to keep the issue alive, then well and good; but this fact we know from the expressions voiced by him to-day—that the resignation of Newberry was not written with a Spencerian pen.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, has the Senator from Mississippi forgotten that the two Senators who were most strong in their opposition to Senator Newberry—the one who led the attack, and one who ably seconded it—were themselves defeated at the polls? I refer to the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. If anything is to be deduced from the voice of the people along the line on November 7 last, of which the Senator from Mississippi has spoken, he will not forget the State of Ohio or the State of Nebraska.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know whether the Senator spoke in Ohio or in Nebraska or not. Looking at the results of the election, I presume he did; but may I ask the Senator whether he ever heard, in a single speech made by anyone who was opposing the reelection of Senator POMERENE in Ohio or Senator HITCHCOCK in Nebraska, criticism of the position they took with reference to unseating Newberry? The Senator's silence indicates he did not, and consequently there was no such issue there.

Mr. SPENCER. I was not in either of those States, and I certainly did not.

Mr. HARRISON. And the Senator never heard of it; did he?

Mr. SPENCER. That does not establish whether it happened or not.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, before moving to adjourn I wish to state that to-morrow I am going to ask the Senate to take up the unfinished business, House Joint Resolution 270, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a credit with the United States for the Government of Liberia, and try to pass it to-morrow.

I now move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, November 23, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, November 22, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name; Thy kingdom come; Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread; and forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil; for Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory, forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana rises to a question of personal privilege. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Clerk to read from the New York Times of yesterday the statement which I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

Governor Parker, referring to newspaper interview by Representative ASWELL, yesterday replied briefly but emphatically to Mr. ASWELL, saying:

"His statement is deliberately untrue. His district is one of the recognized heads of the Ku-Klux Klan in Louisiana."

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I ask that the reading clerk read the assault upon the State of Louisiana published in the Sunday morning Washington Post.

The Clerk read as follows:

[From the Washington Post, November 19, 1922.]

KU-KLUX KLAN RULES LOUISIANA, GOVERNOR ASSERTS; TO ASK PRESIDENT TO ACT; STATE OFFICERS POWERLESS—ON HIS WAY HERE TO INVOKE FEDERAL MARTIAL LAW TO RESCUE HIS STATE FROM DOMINATION BY THIS SECRET AND ALL-POWERFUL ORGANIZATION—COURTS OF THE STATE CEASE TO FUNCTION AND CITIZENS ARE IN TERROR—ATTORNEY GENERAL COMES WITH GOVERNOR TO ASK CENTRAL GOVERNMENT TO TAKE CONTROL—PEOPLE AFRAID TO DISCUSS SITUATION—PRESS IS SILENCED—OUTRAGES AGAINST PERSONS FREQUENT AND NEVER PUNISHED—STATE IN CHAINS OF AN INVISIBLE POWER—SIMILAR CONDITIONS REPORTED IN COMMUNITIES OF OTHER STATES.

SECTION OF THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION UNDER WHICH ACTION IS PROPOSED.

ART. IV, SEC. 4. The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government and shall protect each of them against invasion, and, on application of the legislature, or of the executive (when the legislature can not be convened), against domestic violence.

[By George Rothwell Brown.]

(Special dispatch to the Washington Post.)

(Copyright by the Washington Post.)

BATON ROUGE, LA., Nov. 18.—The Ku-Klux Klan has reached out boldly for civil power over officers of law and justice over an immense territory and has virtually reduced the sovereign State of Louisiana to the vassalage of the invisible empire.

The machinery of State government has almost ceased to function as the unseen power of the mysterious secret society exerts its force in the offices of State and local authorities and in the very courts of law.

Gov. John M. Parker has gone to Washington to lay the whole situation before President Harding, to inform the Federal authorities that State law has virtually come to a stop in Louisiana in the face of the mysterious power of the klan, and to ask the United States Government to take over the administration of the law in Louisiana or in certain specified portions of the State.

NO PRECEDENT IN 50 YEARS.

The governor's conference with the President on Monday will disclose to the country one of the most amazing and humiliating catastrophes in the whole history of American Government. Not since reconstruction times, at least, has any governor of a State laid bare to the Nation the fact that a secret power in that State has usurped the functions of government and brought the administration of the laws to a stop.

The Governor of Louisiana to-day is virtually helpless in the face of the power of the most gigantic secret organization which has ever reared its head in America.

GREAT SECRECY PRESERVED.

Not only has it become impossible for the State authorities to cope with the unseen power of the new Ku-Klux Klan, reared upon the ashes of that institution born of a highly emotionalized chivalry which saved white supremacy throughout the South in the "carpetbag" days which followed the close of the Civil War, but it is almost impossible to detect the presence of the vast invisible empire which apparently covers Louisiana, and has extended its way to adjacent States, where there is reason to believe conditions almost as bad as those in this State now prevail. Certain counties in Texas are reported through confidential "grapevine" channels to be in the grip of the invisible empire which has reared itself above the constitutional law of the State and dictates the administration of justice behind an impenetrable veil of mystery and intimidation.

WANTS THE STATE TAKEN OVER.

Governor Parker will appeal to the Federal Government to go into the State of Louisiana and take over the administration of government in the face of the complete paralysis of the local government, under an impelling constitutional mandate, which will leave the Federal Government no alternative but to act with promptness and vigor if the facts to be disclosed at the Washington conference on Monday justify that drastic course. That these facts will lead to the protection of the State government in Louisiana by the Federal authorities is a widely entertained opinion here in Louisiana, where the conditions which the governor will lay bare are as yet merely the subject of whispered confidences among trusted friends.

ORDERS SILENTLY CARRIED OUT.

The power of the "invisible empire" has settled like a shadow upon the State, and men scarcely dare to breathe what little they know of the inner secrets of the great secret society whose unuttered orders are silently and mysteriously carried out by invisible agencies which are superior to the constituted and elected law officers of the Commonwealth.

There is among men in this part of the South whispered speculation as to what course of action the Federal Government will pursue. The state of affairs to be disclosed by Governor Parker is so out of the whole ordinary experience of Americans as to be fairly stupefying. The very courts of justice are paralyzed.

STATE GOVERNMENT DEFIED.

Governor Parker will disclose that the State authorities have now become powerless to cope with the situation. His administration can not move hand or foot to enforce the laws, the administration of which in certain parts of the State has passed into the keeping of a secret government superior to the State, which sets the State itself at defiance.

Not only has the invisible empire usurped the functions of government but at every turn are disclosed evidences that in many instances the sworn officials of the State are themselves members of the Ku-Klux Klan.

The powers of the Federal Government which Governor Parker will seek to invoke are embodied in section 4 of Article IV of the Constitution of the United States, which reads as follows:

"The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion; and on application of the legislature or of the executive—when the legislature can not be convened—against domestic violence."

MURDERS AND OTHER VIOLENCE.

The extent of "domestic violence" in Louisiana under the State-wide sway of the invisible empire of the Ku-Klux Klan may be disclosed in the confidential communication to be made by Governor Parker and by the attorney general of the State, who has accompanied him to Washington. It has been reported that there have been a great many murders and other acts which, without a full possession of all the facts, would be classified as outrages against citizens.

It is a significant fact, however—and this must be borne in mind—that there is every evidence that the klan enjoys the support and confidence of thousands of the best and most law-abiding citizens of the State. The very scope which the secret society has attained bears testimony to this fact.

CLAIMS ON BEHALF OF KLAN.

It is claimed on behalf of the Klan that it stands for the maintenance of law and order and of Anglo-Saxon supremacy; that its actions setting at naught the law itself have been dictated by the highest feelings of patriotism; that it has punished the lawbreaker and the violator of the sanctity of the home; that it has driven from the community the worthless and the degenerate elements. Thus the system has its defenders, and has been able to extend its sway with such absolutism as to choke off and stifle the machinery of the law which stands in the way of the exercise of its will.

TERRIFYING TO THE LAWLESS.

The mystery which envelops the whole institution of invisible government constitutes one of its most baffling characteristics. Nobody knows who belongs to the klan; nobody knows when or where it will next strike. Its aspects as a supergovernment, taking the administration of the law out of the constitutionally constituted officials of the law and administering justice according to its own conception of what constitutes civil and social justice, render it peculiarly terrifying to the lawless and those who have fallen within whatever limits of ban may have been imposed by the secret objects of the society.

A man is seated in his office, and a stranger enters and asks for a confidential conference. A few minutes later that man is at the railroad office buying a ticket.

"Where to?" asks the agent.

MEN "JUST VANISH."

"It makes no difference, any place," is the answer. The man vanishes. The community knows him no more. There is whispered discussion and then the subject is dropped. The same thing happens again and again. Men mysteriously drop out of their accustomed haunts. Neighborhoods are suddenly relieved of the occasional individual long regarded with suspicion. A man who has been living with a low-caste woman, in violation of the moral code, bringing scandal to a community, suddenly decides to leave. Nobody knows why. He simply leaves and is heard of no more.

SIMILAR CONDITIONS ELSEWHERE.

From other States have gone to Washington reports of similar conditions in other communities. Evidence has been presented that the Klan has permeated the whole fabric of official life, that its members are themselves the officials charged with the enforcement of the law, and that the law is administered not according to the law of the State but according to the law of the invisible power lodged in what is known in popular parlance as the Ku-Klux Klan. Nobody really knows whether in fact this is the true name of the society.

In Louisiana conditions are said to be worse in Morehouse Parish, in the northern part of the State.

ASWELL'S REPLY.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, the scurrilous story just read by the Clerk from the Washington Post of Sunday, seriously reflecting upon the officers of the law and the people of the State of Louisiana, is false and infamous.

In my opinion it is entirely proper for the attorney general of a State to come to Washington to seek advice and assistance from the Department of Justice on any question of law enforcement, but it is quite another matter for the Governor of Louisiana to create a nation-wide sensation and inflict irreparable injury upon his State. Then, too, the governor's noisy methods do not capture criminals.

I propose calmly and without passion to present the simple record of fact in this case, which record to any fair-minded person reveals two facts:

1. That the story is utterly false and without justification or foundation of fact.

2. That to the humiliation and regret of all our people the Governor of Louisiana with his insatiable thirst for publicity is responsible for the grave injury done our State.

What should be done with a governor who for personal or political preferment would sacrifice or assassinate the fair name of his own State is a question to be settled by the people of Louisiana.

Nailing this libel of the law-abiding and patriotic people of my district and State, I present a copy of my telegram to each sheriff and judge in the eight parishes of my congressional district, located in the geographical center of the State, and responses from the law officers and citizens of every parish in the district. These telegrams come from Protestant, Catholic, and Jew, telling one and the same story which means that the evidence I present is irrefutable.

I ask the reading clerk to read these telegrams in order that the Members may hear the refutation.

The Clerk read as follows:

NOVEMBER 19, 1922.

Morning press here publish sensational story that Governor Parker, en route to Washington to invoke Federal martial law in Louisiana, to have Federal Government take control of our State government; that murders and outrages against citizens are frequent, State wide, and unpunished by local officers of the law, and that State and local government has ceased to function, with citizens in terror. Please wire me fully night letter exact situation in your parish. I believe these charges against our people are false and infamous, but I need official statement from you before matter comes up for action to-morrow forenoon.

J. B. ASWELL.

ALEXANDRIA, LA., November 19, 1922.

Hon. JAMES B. ASWELL,
Member Congress, Washington, D. C.:

Your telegram this date giving press reports at Washington, D. C., casting malicious slander on the State of Louisiana received. Such reports are absolutely false in truth and fact. The parish of Rapides, the third largest in the State, has never enjoyed a more peaceful epoch and a more universal observance of the law. This same condition prevails over the entire State of Louisiana. I have personally had occasion to visit various parishes in this State, from the State line of Arkansas to the Gulf of Mexico, in the past 10 days, and I can truthfully say that the citizenship of the State is with its peace officers for a full observance of all its laws, and I brand all reports or rumors for the necessity of Federal interference or martial law as absolutely unnecessary and without foundation or reason, and as being a most willful and malicious slander upon the fair name of this great State.

F. E. DAVID,
Sheriff Rapides Parish, La.

ALEXANDRIA, LA., November 20, 1922.

Congressman JAMES B. ASWELL,
Eighth Louisiana district, Washington, D. C.:

Your wire to Sheriff David read. As a native-born voting taxpayer of our beloved Louisiana, I brand Governor Parker's statements to the press concerning conditions existing in this State as malicious misrepresentations and utterly devoid of facts. Rather significant Governor Parker failed or refused to publish in Louisiana newspapers his intended visit to Washington or its purposes. Maybe his train company en route there affected his mental equilibrium, if such he has ever been possessed of. Am sure that majority wishes of Louisianians would be his commitment to sanitarium for treatment of mental derangements, preferably outside of Louisiana.

W. CANNON FLOURNOY.

COLFAX, LA., November 19, 1922.

Hon. J. B. ASWELL, M. C.
Washington, D. C.:

Violation of law less frequent than at any time in 20 years. Peace and harmony prevail except in very few cases of moonshiners. Press reports mentioned in your telegram false and infamous. Absolutely no foundation for any such expression.

J. W. DUNCAN.

MANY, LA., November 20, 1922.

Congressman J. B. ASWELL,
Washington, D. C.:

No more lawlessness in this parish or district than ordinarily, and courts are functioning properly.

J. H. BOONE, District Judge.
J. B. HILL, District Attorney.

WINNFIELD, LA., November 20, 1922.

J. B. ASWELL,
Representative, Washington, D. C.:

Governor Parker may need United States troops in Baton Rouge, but we don't need them in Winn Parish. The reports are absolutely unfounded, and so far as this parish is concerned conditions were never better. Recently Governor Parker told one of our citizens that this part of the State had given him no trouble.

R. W. OGLESBY, Judge.
W. T. HEFLIN, Sheriff.
A. W. RADENCICH, Representative.

MANY, LA., November 20, 1922.

Congressman J. B. ASWELL,
Washington, D. C.:

You can not denounce too strongly as absolutely false and uncalled for report that the crime and disorder are frequent or beyond control of officers. Every person accused of serious crime in Sabine Parish within the past 12 months has either been tried or is under arrest awaiting trial. The courts are doing their duty, and we are only bothered with petty offenses, such as bootlegging. Martial law would be a disgrace and a travesty on justice.

J. D. DARBY,
Sheriff Sabine Parish.

NATCHITOCHES, LA., November 20, 1922.

Congressman JAMES B. ASWELL,
Care House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Conditions in Natchitoches Parish and bordering parishes are very quiet. Very few violations of law; no mobs, no one fears for life or property; people harmonizing and are generally settling down to business. I can not conceive anyone making such rash, false, slanderous statements against Louisiana's good people. North and central Louisiana are in perfect order. Some one must have had a nightmare.

J. W. PAYNE,
Sheriff Natchitoches Parish, La.

NATCHITOCHES, LA., November 20, 1922.

Hon. J. B. ASWELL,
Washington, D. C.:

Any reports that outrages and murders against citizens are being committed or that law violators are going unpunished by officers throughout this State are false and untrue. Local government and citizens of my district cooperating. No terror among people. Conditions among citizens, law-abiding and quiet. Glad to refute such slanderous statements.

JAS. W. JONES, JR.,
Judge Eleventh District Court of Louisiana.

COLFAX, LA., November 20, 1922.

Hon. J. B. ASWELL,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.:

Conditions in my parish for peace and quiet excellent. Could not be better under circumstances. No unrest among the citizens; only minor violations of the law, mostly caused by the whisky element. As for the need of martial law, such an idea is ridiculous, false, and infamous and without foundation. Such propaganda could only come from a revengeful mind to satisfy personal grudge. Officially I am in touch with the sheriffs throughout the State, being located in the center, thus know conditions generally to be excellent.

It is only the wicked who are peeved and looking for refuge under the guise of the Government.

I am exceedingly grieved to know our great State and its good people are being wrongfully accused.

L. O. CLINTON,
Sheriff Grant Parish, La.

LEESVILLE, LA., November 19, 1922.

Hon. JAMES B. ASWELL,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.:

Law and order prevail in Vernon Parish. Local officers performing duties. No disorders here and anticipate none; rumors to contrary absolutely false.

D. F. TURNER, Sheriff.

JENA, LA., November 19, 1922.

Hon. J. B. ASWELL,
Washington, D. C.:

In reply to your telegram, beg to advise that the statement referred to in Washington press as to willful violations of the law and that officers do not put forth every effort to enforce the law are absolutely false and there are not grounds for such statement. We have some minor violations of law, such as violating the Volstead Act and Hood bill. The conditions of our parish for the past three or four years have greatly improved as to respect of our State laws. We do know that our officers and citizens do not deserve any such unjust criticism. Our citizens and officers, with respect to the enforcement of law, will compare favorably with any parish or county in the United States. Your telegram is our first intimation of such complaint. From Governor Parker's speeches and newspaper clippings in Louisiana we note that most service complaints are against the Klan known as Ku-Klux Klan. If there is any such organization in La Salle Parish, we have no knowledge of it, and there has been no violations that have been attributed to the Klan. We assure you that we stand for enforcement of law and we do not need any Federal aid.

J. B. PEYTON, Sheriff.
F. E. JONES, Judge District Court.

MANY, LA., November 20, 1922.

J. B. ASWELL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Louisiana papers carry nothing about matter in message; think there must be some mistake made by newspaper. Everything quiet and orderly here.

W. H. VANDECAVER.

ALEXANDRIA, LA., November 19, 1922.

J. B. ASWELL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Press comment is false; we have the most prosperous and peaceful country in the United States; less crime committed in Louisiana than any other State in the United States.

JONAS ROSENTHAL.

MARKSVILLE, LA., November 20, 1922.

Congressman J. B. ASWELL,
Washington, D. C.:

Your telegram a great surprise; nothing of the kind exists or ever thought of. This part of the State as peaceful and law-abiding as ever in its history.

AMET GUILLOT, Sheriff.

MARKSVILLE, LA., November 20, 1922.

Congressman J. B. ASWELL,
Washington, D. C.:

Peace and quiet never more supreme, as at present no such conditions exist as referred to in your message.

S. ALLEN BORDELON, Judge.

ALEXANDRIA, LA., November 20, 1922.

Congressman JAMES B. ASWELL,
Washington, D. C.:

Your wire to Sheriff David read. The complained of conditions in this State and its parishes attributed to Governor Parker through daily press is purely imaginary on his part. I have lived in this State practically all my life and have never known conditions any more peaceful or orderly than at present.

SWORDS R. LEE.

ALEXANDRIA, LA., November 19, 1922.

Hon. J. B. ASWELL, Member of Congress,
Washington, D. C.:

Telegram to sheriff received. I wish to brand such charges as malicious unqualified lies. If press report true, I am sure Governor Parker has been misled by some false, malicious, cowardly friends possessed of solely mercenary motives. If such be the governor's attitude would recommend he be sent to Surgeon General for S. C. D.

MARVIN CAPPELL, M. D.

ALEXANDRIA, LA., November 20, 1922.

JAMES B. ASWELL,
United States House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.:

Your wire date; have conferred with sheriff and others. Rumors absolutely without foundation; law and order never was better observed in Rapides than to-day. Surprised, and news came like thunderbolt. Must be malicious statements from unreliable source. Our officers competent and doing their duty. No more peaceful community in the United States than this. You can most emphatically deny any allegation of need of martial law here. We resent any such statement being made and desire to know names of parties circulating such reports.

A. T. FELT,
General Secretary Alexandria Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. ASWELL. Gentlemen, these convincing telegrams from every parish in my congressional district should remove the stain from the fair name of our State, reveal the fine spirit of our people, and impress upon the country the magnitude of the crime committed against a State blessed not only with patriotic and progressive people but rich in natural location and varied resources little known to the world. [Applause.]

Louisiana contains 45,996 square miles of land and 2,328 square miles of landlocked bays, lagoons, and rivers.

Louisiana soils are divided into alluvial lands, sea or coast marsh, redeemable by levees and drainage, bluff land, prairies, long-leaf pines, hill lands, and oak lands.

Louisiana is composed of 28,000,000 acres of land, of which only about 5,500,000 are cultivated, and on these there are yearly produced crops valued at $350,000,000.

Louisiana's climate is admirable—breezy and cool in summer, mild in winter, healthful at all times. The State is not subject to extremes of heat in summer or of cold in the winter.

Louisiana's products are varied and abundant. Sugar, cotton, corn, rice, tobacco, oats, wheat, sorghum, jute, hemp, ramie, grasses, clovers, and forage crops; millet, potatoes, vegetables, oranges, lemons, mandarins, olives, figs, and grapes are produced with great profit and little labor.

Louisiana's live stock consists of sheep, horses, hogs, cattle, and mules. Her pastures are inviting, her waters are pure and refreshing, and her canebrakes in winter offer protection and forage.

Louisiana's railway system traverses 7,780 miles.

Louisiana leads all other States this year in highway construction.

Louisiana has more navigable rivers and a greater length of navigable waterways than any other State.

Louisiana's rivers, bayous, and lakes are mostly navigable and many run north and south through the entire State. They furnish transportation facilities for many commodities and create competition in rates. They furnish water for irrigation, are deep, running streams which abound in fish and furnish cool water for stock.

Every parish except four can be reached by navigable streams at some period during the year.

Louisiana produces one-half million bales of cotton annually.

Louisiana produces 95 per cent of all the cane sugar raised in the United States.

Louisiana grows more rice than any other State in the Union.

The strawberry and vegetable crops of Louisiana amount to more than $5,000,000 annually.

Louisiana's fishing grounds and oyster beds are famous and abundant and furnish the most delicious of these luxuries in the world.

Louisiana is the coming seat of the oyster industry of the United States. Her tidal bottoms, the home of the oyster, embrace 4,500,000 acres, a greater area of oyster waters than have Maryland and Virginia combined.

Louisiana's forests are magnificent and the varieties of her timbers numerous. They consist of oaks, hickories, ash, elms, gums, magnolias, pines, maples, cypress, and a quantity of others.

Louisiana is the first State in the Union in lumber production.

Louisiana's fuel-oil and natural-gas fields are unsurpassed in the United States. Some of her oil wells have a record of 3,000,000 barrels of oil each.

Louisiana has the greatest deposit of pure rock salt in the Western Hemisphere. It comes up to 99 per cent pure.

Louisiana's educational facilities are splendid. Every parish is well provided with public schools for both white people and negroes.

Louisiana's private universities, colleges, and schools are of high order.

Louisiana's State university and agricultural and mechanical college is an up-to-date institution, and within a few years will be entirely rebuilt.

Louisiana's normal college at Natchitoches is a splendid training school, offering great advantages in scholarly education.

Louisiana's polytechnic schools at Ruston and Lafayette are well equipped.

Louisiana's Southern University, a State school for negroes, is equal to any in the South.

Louisiana has a splendid deaf and dumb institute, a new institute for the blind, two charity hospitals, a soldiers' home, large and commodious buildings for the infirm, and an institution for the negro blind.

Louisiana has four State agricultural experiment stations—at New Orleans, Baton Rouge, Calhoun, and Crowley.

Health conditions in Louisiana are good. The death rate is far below that in many States in the Union.

Louisiana's towns and cities are progressive, thriving, businesslike, and anxious to welcome people from other sections.

Louisiana's people are law-abiding, liberty-loving, and God-fearing—red-blooded patriotic Americans.

Louisiana's wealth of sunshine and climate; her treasures of natural resources boundless and as yet untold; her minerals, forests, and fertile soils; her 7,000,000 acres of unoccupied cut-over lands; the world-famed hospitality of her citizens, all offer unexcelled opportunities for worthy people from other States to come among us, become citizens, and enjoy with us the astounding riches and opportunities of our State. Her population numbers less than 2,000,000, while there is room for 10,000,000 happy and prosperous people. We have extended a hearty welcome to all the worthy who choose to live among us. We love our country and, like Abou Ben Adhem, we love our fellowman. [Applause.]

The tide has turned to Louisiana. The cry throughout the land to-day is not "Young man, go West," but "Young man, go South," to Louisiana. Our people with open hearts and earnest purpose are eagerly inviting capital to be invested in our rare industrial and financial opportunities.

What a cruel blow below the belt industrially and financially to our hopes and purposes! How costly and difficult the regaining of former prestige! The impression by the publication of vile and groundless stories sent broadcast throughout the length and breadth of the land has placed in the public mind the belief that lawlessness, crime, murder, and bloodshed are rampant in the State of Louisiana. A dagger has been thrust into the heart of our people and unless withdrawn now the wound will be bleeding for years to come. The injury done to our State and people is appalling. We are charged with being a people more lawless than the Mexicans ever were and whose State government is more puny and feeble than that of Russia, but when the record is given in detail, thank God, the clouds will pass away and the sunshine of promise will burst upon us again with the country seeing Louisiana still marching forward in peace, in progress, in contentment, and in purpose equal to that of any other State. Like a rare gem in the crown forming the States of the Union, Louisiana will continue to radiate the glory of her proud people in their natural wealth and in their religious freedom and political independence. [Applause.]

The Governor of Louisiana now denies responsibility for the whole matter, but, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, it is interesting to note that the sensational story was released in Baton Rouge Saturday night for the Sunday papers, as the governor dramatically left for Washington and gave out interviews along the way. Finding no committee, brass band, or banners to receive him at the station here, receiving scant encouragement from any Member of Congress, and meeting at the White House the big-hearted, personally lovable President, who cordially greeted him as he greets all his fellow citizens, the governor found a chilly reception when he asked for Federal interference in a sovereign State. [Applause.]

The governor then undertook to "kiss himself out" of the embarrassing situation by declaring he had not come to seek Federal interference and denying all responsibility for the murderous assaults upon the State of Louisiana in a letter to the Washington Post as follows:

Never since I have been reading newspapers have I known a writer to build such a fanciful superstructure on such a slight foundation of fact as has been done by George Rothwell Brown, of your staff, in the article sent you from Baton Rouge and printed with such display in your issue of Sunday. The article is a slander on Louisiana and on its chief executive.

I did not see your correspondent and he made no application for an interview. Most of his statements could have been disproven had he made even the most superficial investigation. To state that the klan "has reduced the sovereign State of Louisiana to the vassalage of the invisible empire" is one of the most extravagantly inaccurate observations I have ever known a newspaper man to make, and it is the more inexcusable because the man was on the ground. There is absolutely nothing on which he could have based his statement that "the machinery of State government has almost ceased to function."

There never has been the most remote idea on the part of anyone in Louisiana of appealing to the Federal Government "to go into the State of Louisiana and take over the administration of government."

I will not take the time to deny each of the many misstatements in your article, but can say it is 90 per cent inaccurate and conveys a totally wrong impression. The damage done by this article and the importance given it by the display with which you presented it will be made the subject of conference on my return to Louisiana, at which time it will be decided as to the further action that will be taken.

Masked men and invisible empires have no place in America, and I have denounced the Ku-Klux Klan as vigorously as I know how in its own stronghold. We have only begun to fight this movement, which strikes at fundamentals of orderly government. We will be able to rid Louisiana of this vicious development the more quickly if we can have the help of other States and of the Federal Government. We can deal effectively with our local situation if it can be cut off from the support and encouragement it is receiving from the outside. I have sought cooperation in an effort to meet the situation in the most immediate way, and to free the people of some of our communities from the terrorism in which they now are held. Since the klan does not work in the open, I may say that the problem presented is largely an investigatorial one.

You will note that in one paragraph he denies and in another he admits, then he denies and again he admits.

The governor says 10 per cent of the Post story is true. Let him tell the world who gave Brown that 10 per cent.

In his dilemma, as he denies he ever sought Federal control of Louisiana, the governor evidently forgot that on October 30, 1922, discussing the disappearance of a man in Morehouse Parish, La., as a result, citizens who reside there say, of a neighborhood feud which had existed for many years, in a letter to Mr. Joseph Morningstar, 650 West Thirty-fourth Street, New York City, the governor said:

It will be necessary to use all the influence at your command to get the United States Government to take an interest in this matter, and for that reason I would appreciate your writing me at length your opinion of this man as a soldier, and put it in such shape that I can send it to Washington with the certainty that it will bring results. If these results do not come quickly, could I impose upon you by asking you to get in touch with all your Congressmen and Senators, requesting that they take the matter up with the Department of Justice to see that not only is this matter probed to the bottom but that the murderers are brought before the bar of justice?

In sending Governor Parker's letter to Senator WALSH of Massachusetts on November 9, 1922, printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday, Mr. Morningstar, of New York City, in an appeal to Senator WALSH to get Federal action in the Louisiana case, said:

Where the governor of a State admits that justice can not be secured through local authority it seems obvious that the Federal authorities gain jurisdiction, and the copy of the letter of Governor Parker clearly puts this case in that category.

Do these letters not prove that Governor Parker for many weeks has been trying to invoke Federal usurpation of the government of a sovereign State?

The President, of course, denied him Federal interference in Louisiana. Then, after repeated denials and admissions of his purpose in coming to Washington, the governor took a parting shot at the Louisiana situation in the afternoon papers of yesterday:

A man is a damnable coward to attach himself to such an organization and remain within it as one of its active forces. It is now my solemn duty to whip them. Louisiana will soon see a fight to the finish. The best people of the State are behind me, and I know I will win.

If we could have some help from the several States and from the Federal Government the matter of delving to the bottom of the rotten mess would be made easier.

I know nothing of the Ku-Klux Klan in Louisiana except from statements in the press, generally resulting from the governor's public threats, bluff, and bluster. With the exception of Mr. Simmons, of Atlanta, who appeared here in a public hearing, I have never to my personal knowledge seen a klansman. I was in every parish in my district in the summer and no one discussed the Ku-Klux Klan with me or sought in any way to connect me with the Klan or with its enemies. I am therefore free to defend the people of my district and State without reference to any fraternal or religious organization.

I am 100 per cent Louisianian and I resent the attempt to surrender the sovereignty of my State to Federal authority. [Great applause.] I resent the unwarranted and libelous assaults upon the law-abiding people of Louisiana. I gladly defend all the people of my State against such injustice. If these villainous published attacks as the record indicates were caused by assertions of the Governor of Louisiana, he presents a humiliating and pathetic spectacle playing cheap politics at the expense of our State to gain front-page notoriety. He may perhaps have his eye on our senior Senator's seat, or on the office of Vice President with the Progressive Republicans in 1924, who announce a meeting here early in December to take over the present Republican Party, now about to go into political bankruptcy, write its platform, and name its candidates. What difference to him whether Democratic Senator or Republican Vice President? Judging from the thrilling story sent out from Baton Rouge, the governor came, waved the red flag against the people of his State, and got publicity ahead of the Progressive show, perhaps to attract their attention. But I denounce in unmeasured terms the attacks upon the good name, the honor, the integrity, and the patriotic devotion of the law-abiding people of the great sovereign State of Louisiana, a people whose high regard for law and order, whose civic pride, whose moral integrity, whose ready obedience to law, whose unselfish devotion to State and country, whose fine Americanism are surpassed by none in this or any other land. [Applause.]

If the Governor of Louisiana finds himself helpless, if there is a crisis in Louisiana, a riot, an uprising, or public emergency, why has he not called out the State militia or assembled the Louisiana Legislature, instead of damning our State with a demagogic public appeal for Federal aid from a Republican national administration?

Upon what ground can Federal law be invoked in the Louisiana case? Why has not the Governor of New Jersey appealed for Federal aid in the Hall-Mills case? Establish this precedent, and should a southern darkey steal a chicken and the local authorities fail to catch him, Federal officers could be sent into the State to track him down and punish him for stealing the fowl. This proposal is too preposterous and absurd to be discussed among intelligent men. [Applause.]

It is inconceivable, it is monstrous that after 50 years of peace and patriotic devotion of the southern people to the flag of our country the governor of any State, North or South, should seek again to bring the damnable disaster of even a semblance of carpet-bag rule upon any sovereign State. I care not what others may do, but I for one will go to any humanly possible limit to prevent the enactment of this crime against my State, against a people so proud, so loyal, and so devoted to our country and her institutions. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, may I have the attention of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] for a moment? There are two gentlemen from Louisiana who desire about 10 minutes each to speak somewhat along the same lines as the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL] has just spoken.

Mr. MONDELL. How many?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Two. Will it be agreeable to the gentleman to let them speak now?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think it is entirely proper for these gentlemen to be heard.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILSON] may speak for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILSON] may address the House for 10 minutes?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana. [Applause.]

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to revise his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I merely wish to make a short statement expressing in a general way my grievous disappointment and indignation at the great injustice that has been done the people of my State and of my congressional district. It is useless to go into details about this matter. I have no particular criticism to level against anyone, except that which would naturally arise out of a condition of this sort; but as a citizen of Louisiana and as a Member of this House and as a representative of a great congressional district, I feel it is my duty to condemn in unmeasured terms the unwarranted assault upon local authorities and people of Louisiana and to defend them so far as possible against the statement that they are unable to enforce the law in Louisiana and to control their domestic affairs.

Gentlemen, out of all the pitiless publicity that has come to my State, out of all the insinuations that our local government has broken down, that lawlessness is rampant and that life is insecure, what do you find? Going over this entire record you will find presented to the Nation only one law violation in one locality.

I wish to assert here that Louisiana and the people of Louisiana are just as law-abiding as the people in any State of this Union. Probably the biggest question in America today is one of law and order, one of respect for and obedience to the legally constituted authorities. But in each State it is the duty and the province of the citizenship of that State, of the courts of that State, to enforce its own laws and punish those who violate them. I think the action of the President in notifying the people of Louisiana and the authorities in Louisiana that the Federal Government would not interfere because no Federal question was involved was admirable. [Applause.]

Now, in all this publicity and out of all the things appearing in the newspapers throughout the Union, in all the charges against my State as to lawlessness, I say they have only mentioned one crime committed in one locality, and I doubt if any other State could show a record equal to that. Since we have been here we have seen riots in Washington, midnight murders and assassinations. This District is under the jurisdiction of Congress. Why should the State of Louisiana come here for protection? The State of Kansas just now is having trouble similar to that ascribed to the State of Louisiana, but is attending to her own business and not asking any assistance at the hands of the Federal Government.

The parish of Morehouse, in my district, is the particular point under fire. I can say that Morehouse Parish is one of the most progressive and law-abiding parishes in Louisiana, and the town of Mer Rouge, where the crime is alleged to have been committed, is one of the best communities in the State. But if the crime referred to is ever to be ferreted out and punished, it will have to be through the authorities of the State of Louisiana and of the parish of Morehouse.

I want to express my appreciation to the Members of the House for the various assurances they have given that they do not believe the charges made against my State. [Applause.] The people of Louisiana, just as those in other States in the Union, resent any attempt to draw the Federal Government into taking charge of the local affairs and interfering with their local self-government. Every time that experiment has been tried it has resulted disastrously. We know what it means to the citizenship of any State to draw the Federal Government into interference with the local or State government.

Gentlemen, I wish once more to enter my solemn protest against this attempt to get the Federal Government to interfere with the affairs of our State, and to express my indignation on account of the damaging publicity that has been given the affairs of Louisiana through any attempt by officials of Louisiana or newspapers to destroy her prestige and the good name of her people by the imputation that she is helpless and impotent in any respect.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILSON. I will.

Mr. BUTLER. Is there any evidence anywhere that the governor has asked for Federal interference, except what is in the headlines in the newspapers?

Mr. WILSON. I think there is.

Mr. BUTLER. I have been watching for that and have not seen it.

Mr. WILSON. The governor's statement was that he came to this city for Federal assistance; that is his statement that was printed in the press. These newspaper articles state that the attempt was to be made to have the Federal Government take charge of the affairs in Louisiana, and that the local State government had broken down.

Mr. PARK of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILSON. Yes.

Mr. PARK of Georgia. Did not the letter of the governor, in which he denied the statement in the newspaper, bear out the very statements that the newspaper made?

Mr. WILSON. These letters are in the RECORD and will speak for themselves.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. SANDLIN] may proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I regret it as exceedingly unfortunate that the time of this body should be taken up by the discussion of matters of this kind. My colleagues from Louisiana have gone somewhat into the details in the discussion of what I believe and know is a base slander against the people of my State. I was much surprised on getting off the train Sunday morning to take up the Washington Post and reading the story which the gentlemen have referred to.

The evil effects of a slander against the character of anyone, when once circulated, can not be entirely eliminated. This is true with reference to a State.

However, I feel that I would not be representing my people did I not do all in my power to refute the effects of an unwarranted, uncalled-for, and vile slander which was contained in the article published in the Washington Post on last Sunday. I will direct my remarks to that part of the article which said—

That the courts of the State cease to function and citizens are in terror.

I have lived in the district which I have the honor to represent all my life. Previous to my service here I was connected with the courts of my State for 16 years in the capacities of prosecuting attorney and district judge.

I have just returned from Louisiana, where I spent two months amongst the people of my district. I personally know the Federal, State, and parish officers; saw and talked to most of them while there, and heard of no trouble of any kind of the nature as outlined in the Post's story.

The reason for the writing of this story I do not know. I can not say whether it was caused to further some one's political ambition or not. The article would indicate that the writer was in touch with the Governor of Louisiana and was representing his views. However, the governor has stated over his signature that he did not see the writer of this article. That is a controversial matter between the Governor of Louisiana and the Washington Post. But what I want the Members of this House to know is that the conditions in Louisiana, as given me by Representatives from other sections, and the conditions in my district as I know them would not justify the slanderous article which was carried in the Post on Sunday.

I know that this article is a gross and unfair misrepresentation of conditions as they really exist in Louisiana, and feel impelled to condemn and denounce it as an unjustifiable slander of our splendid people and the good name of our State. I can not lead myself to believe that the governor and chief law officer of our State could be so misinformed as to the law and the facts as to ask for Federal intervention to supersede and displace the legally constituted authorities of the State of Louisiana and destroy local self-government. I deny that any legal or constitutional authority exists for such a course as pointed out in the Post's story, which quotes section 4 of Article IV of the Constitution of the United States, as follows:

The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government and protect each of them against invasion and, on application of the legislature or of the executive (when the legislature can not be convened), against domestic violence.

For this section of the Constitution provides for action by the State legislature, when it could be convened, before any action is authorized by the governor; and yet the Post's article indicates that the governor and attorney general are ignoring this plain provision of the law and are seeking to set up a carpet-bag government in Louisiana without the consent of her people. Through this infamous, uncalled-for, and unwarranted article Louisiana has suffered irreparable injury, her people and authorities placed in a false light before the Nation, as evidenced by expressions from the press and pulpit here in the Capital City; and while I realize the injuries done our State can not be repaired and her loss of prestige fully restored, I feel that I voice the sentiment of her people, irrespective of rank, creed, or individual views with reference to any organization, when I enter my indignant protest and unhesitatingly assert that Louisiana is capable of local self-government and of the administration of her laws and the dispensation of justice through her own chosen officials and tribunals, which are as competent and patriotic as in any other State in the Union.

There are Ku-Klux Klansmen in Louisiana the same as in Washington, New York, Chicago, and Boston. Just why my State should be singled out for such outrageous slander and pitiless publicity is more than I can understand. I have just returned from Louisiana, and know of no conditions to justify in any respect the statements appearing in the press about the Ku-Klux Klan in Louisiana. The courts in Louisiana, Federal and State, are intact and able to function without any interference from the Federal Government. The intimation that the National Government should take charge of the State is an outrageous slander on Louisiana and will be resented by its citizens, irrespective of section or organization, be it secret or open.

We have a man at the head of affairs in this Nation who, I believe, before he will lend his aid to any such drastic action that has been proposed will demand more evidence than a newspaper report or statements from some one with political ambitions.

I am gratified with the expressions of Members of this body, coming from all sections of the country, who have frankly assured the Members from Louisiana that they do not believe these reports that have been carried in the press.

Summing the whole matter up, I say that it is all bunk. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, after what has been said with regard to the great and good State of Louisiana and in her defense, I think it might be well to have the RECORD record the fact that no one outside of the State of Louisiana, so far as I know, has suggested any extension of Federal control over that great Commonwealth. So far as I am informed, no one in authority in the Federal service, in Washington or elsewhere, has suggested, encouraged, or approved any extension of Federal authority over that Commonwealth. We all wish Louisiana well. We all have very great confidence in her. We approve what her representatives have said in her behalf, and on this side we are just as earnest as they are that Louisiana and all the States shall retain in full force and effect all of their sovereignty and work out their own problems. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 446.

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering H. R. 12817, a bill to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes. General debate on said bill shall continue until the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union rises on Saturday, November 25, at which time general debate shall terminate. The time for such general debate shall be controlled and divided equally by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries; that on Monday, November 27, the bill shall be taken up for amendment under the five-minute rule; that the consideration of the bill for amendments shall continue not later than the hour of 4 o'clock postmeridian on November 29, at which hour the committee shall rise and report the bill back to the House with such amendments as may have been agreed upon; whereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and on all amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

With the following committee amendments:

Line 10, page 1, strike out the words "controlled and" and insert, after the word "equally," the words "between those in favor of and those opposing the bill and shall be controlled."

Page 1, line 11, after the word "member" insert "opposed to the bill."

Line 15, strike out the word "that" and insert the word "than" after the word "later."

After line 6, page 2, add the words "that in consideration of the bill any appropriation made in the bill shall not be subject to a point of order."

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, what has the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] to suggest in relation to time for the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. POU. Would the gentleman from Kansas be willing to have 40 minutes on a side on the resolution? In view of the importance of the legislation to be considered I think there ought to be that much discussion.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I think that is a fair suggestion.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time for the discussion of the rule be limited to 40 minutes on a side, one-half to be controlled by myself and one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the resolution as amended provides that the shipping bill may be taken up for consideration. It allows three days of general debate, continuing until Saturday of this week, including that legislative day. It also provides for three days' consideration under the five-minute rule for amendment and for a vote upon the bill at 4 o'clock on the 29th day of this month. The rule leaves the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule open to the widest amendment on the floor. Indeed, in order to make it possible that the House itself shall have the greatest opportunity for considering the bill for amendment, the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries took the bill into the committee and inserted as a part of the bill many amendments that they had intended offering from the floor. This was done in order to save the time for the Members of the House to offer such amendments as they might deem proper. It is thought that three days devoted to amending the bill will give every Member of the House an opportunity for the presentation and discussion of such amendments as are offered for the purpose of bettering the bill.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. If I understand the provisions of the rule—I have not read it, but I have been advised as to its provisions and have heard the statement of the gentleman from Kansas—they are that commencing next Monday morning the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule, and that the bill shall be voted on not later than Wednesday, the 29th, at 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is true.

Mr. GARNER. I merely make this suggestion to the gentleman that in case——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, I can not yield for suggestions.

Mr. GARNER. I would like to ask the gentleman another question. In case a respectable minority should undertake to offer amendments, say to the first 30 pages of the bill, they could occupy the three days in the offering of such amendments and there would be no opportunity to offer amendments to the remainder of the bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If amendments are offered in good faith for the purpose of bettering the bill, they can be discussed and disposed of on the floor in less time than is provided for in the rules. Opportunity to amend the bill is given under the rule. Any effort to filibuster, any effort to delay action, any effort merely to postpone action upon the bill will be thwarted by the rule calling for a vote upon the bill at the time provided.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I can not yield further because I have not the time. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time, and will ask the gentleman from North Carolina to use his time.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker [applause], of course nothing that anyone could say would change the determination of the majority to put through this rule and probably hereafter to put through this vicious legislation. We can not but record our protest. The legislation proposed is in harmony with the policy of the Republican Party of always providing to give somebody $10 in order to enable that somebody to give somebody else $1. This bill is the final milestone in the announced program of the Harding administration in its return to normalcy. The first milestone was the tariff bill—the worst measure of its kind ever enacted by Congress. The second milestone was the so-called antilynching bill, and this is the third milestone. It is well that the administration called this extra session, because in the Congress which will follow this there will be 74 places which are known now by Republicans, but which will know them no more in the succeeding Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, this rule does give reasonable debate. The majority of the Committee on Rules, however, at the last minute inserted a provision which makes the appropriations that are provided for in the bill not subject to a point of order. We can only appeal from this day to another future day when the cause of the people will have a better opportunity. The action of the President in forcing this bill is plain defiance of the will of the American people if the recent election means anything. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS]. [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, the rule makes in order a piece of legislation vastly important and quite naturally it will be seriously contested. It is easily understood why that contest is on. I am convinced that the bill opens the way to solve a serious problem, both from a commercial and defensive point of view. I am persuaded that whatever differences there might be in the minds of individual Members as to the proper method of proceeding, to materialize a real necessity, we are generally agreed that the United States ought to become a merchant marine power. There may be those among us who are willing to permanently give up all hope of staying on the sea. I doubt whether there is any great number who are willing to have the country abandon the sea. On the other hand, I think everybody is convinced that it is not a wise economic policy to employ our competitors to carry our overseas trade if it can be done by ourselves. Then, in addition to the economic importance, which is primarily commercial, all Americans can realize the importance of the national-defense element in an American merchant marine. It is needless for me here to comment upon that phase of the problem. Our recent experience makes it unnecessary for further comment. This bill is not the outline of a policy or a declaration of a new purpose of the Government as to whether we are going on the sea or not. We are already on the sea at terrific cost, and the question now before us is rather how are we going to operate our merchant marine; that is, how are we going to profitably run these vessels in the American merchant marine which are now already built? We have now at least 1,500 steel ships, only a small portion of which we are now operating. We must decide upon what we are to do with them. I am sure we will not scrap them as we did the wooden ships. The country does not want us to convey them to foreign flags and abandon the sea.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I will yield.

Mr. COCKRAN. Do I understand the gentleman to say that this bill is intended to apply only to ships now in existence and not to apply to ships to be built or operated in the future?

Mr. FESS. The bill is broader than that. The real significance is, What are we going to do with the 1,500 steel ships, 400 of which are in use and 1,100 of which are tied up to the wharves, and by the nature of the case must be expensive or finally deteriorate? When this bill becomes operative, if there is any lack of any character of ships that ought to be built to fulfill the complement of a necessary merchant fleet, of course under the bill that will be done.

I did not mean to use language in the narrow sense, but I meant to say that the big question with us now is how are we going to stay on the seas, not only employing the 400 vessels already in use but add to the vessels we are already operating those 1,100 others which are tied up at the wharf. What is our alternative? I take it that there is no possibility of operating these vessels under the plan of the subvention theory that was our method prior to the Civil War when we were a debtor nation. The mere fact that we built up a merchant marine at that time in that way is not now an argument that we could do it, because we have become a creditor nation instead of a debtor nation. In this case it will operate against rather than for us. If we employ the preferential tariff where we sell more than we buy, it will operate to our disadvantage. That is perfectly clear, and no one can seriously contend that that method is tenable. That leaves us the choice between Government operation or the plan of this bill. Whether it is better for us to go on with Government operation, which I know is very strongly supported by a great number of people in this country as well as by a great number of representatives in both bodies of Congress, I state to you gentlemen frankly that I am not in favor of that alternative. It would seem to me that our recent experience with Government operation of transportation would be decisive against Government ownership of a merchant marine. [Applause.] I think that the evidence of the inefficiency and the wicked extravagance that we have undergone in only recent times in our experiments in Government control ought for all time to put at rest that particular policy of operation. If you and I live long enough to see an end of its bad results, I shall be surprised. I know how a great number of our people argue in favor of it, conceding its inefficiency and wastefulness. They argue that we should go ahead and suffer the loss, no matter how much, so long as it distributes the cost of operation, because the loss will go to the persons who are operating it—that is, those who are employed in doing it—and we could therefore afford to suffer the loss, because while the public pays it it goes to that part of the public employed in the business. Well, the difficulty about that is that the difference in the cost between our operation and our competitors' operation is most largely the difference that we pay our labor in comparison with what is paid to our competitors' labor.

In Government operation the loss is paid out of the Government Treasury without any degree of efficient service. Political operation, which is tantamount to Government operation, from the nature of the case will sacrifice service for place or position and never look to results because no one is responsible, since no one bears the loss. If the Government does it, no one feels it; then why not distribute the cost to those employed, no matter what the loss may be?

If the difference in cost must be made up, then make it specific. And in reality the subsidy in this bill, if you care to call it so—and I do not run away from the word—in reality the subsidy is a subsidy to American labor. If there was no difference in cost of operation there would be no reason whatever for a subsidy. If we were willing to bring our labor to the basis of the labor of our competitors there would not be any doubt at all about our operating an American merchant marine, whether by Government or private enterprise. [Applause.] But I do not believe that it is the thought of the American Government and the American people to place our labor under the same conditions as that of our competitors, whether on the Atlantic or the Pacific. I do not believe that we are ready to go to the same level of either the scale of pay or the conditions under which they work. It has always been the policy of our Government, and especially when within the control of the Republican Party, to maintain the American scale of wages in order to maintain the American standard of living. With our protective tariff we have succeeded where our laws operate. Attempting on the sea where our laws can not control, we have been driven off the sea. It is because of our inability to cover the seas with American protective legislation that we ask for this protection of our American merchant marine. We aspire to maintain the higher standards of labor on the sea as we have ever done on the land. But with open competition on the sea we have placed our operations at such a great disadvantage in comparison with the operations of our competitors that we were finally driven almost off the seas.

Members of the House, I stand for the higher standards, and therefore I am not inclined to vote for a modification of the navigation laws looking to a reduction of the standard of American labor. There may be need of some revision in detail, but we will hold to the higher standards. If we do that, and that is a matter of law, then I think this Government—unless we are going to continue the business of Government operation, which to me is unthinkable—this Government must make up the difference between the cost of American ships under American law and the cost of operation of competitor ships under our competitors' laws. That difference will exist and must be made up, whatever be our policy on the seas. That seems to me absolutely certain. In Government operation it will be large and indefinite.

If we are to make up the difference, as I assume we must, then let us make it up specifically. Do not make it indefinite. If it is to be a subsidy to labor, let us not permit it under an extravagant, ineffective operation by the Government, where we suffer greater costs with less results, but let us specify what it is to be in the law and then hold those responsible for the efficiency of it responsible for making it a successful merchant marine. That is what this bill attempts to do.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is it the gentleman's contention that the benefits of this subsidy will inure alone to the laboring man involved in this question, and that none of the real profit will go to the operators of the ships?

Mr. FESS. The benefits will primarily be to the laboring men employed. I presume that there would be very little, if any, profit beyond what an operator would have, provided he were free to employ foreign labor under foreign conditions, which we will not permit him to do. Our national defense interest will prevent that practice if nothing else would do it. So far as the profit would go, I say to my good friend from Alabama that if the law would make it free for the American company to employ foreign labor, coolie labor, under the conditions that our competitors would employ them, he would make as much, if not more, profit than under this bill. In fact, we are frequently told that no subsidy is necessary if we would repeal these laws. But we will not agree to that. So far as I am concerned I would never agree to the employment on American ships, which might be needed in time of war, of foreigners who have no attachment to our Government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HICKS). The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. FESS. May I have two minutes more?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield another minute to the gentleman.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, as I see it, it is a choice either to go off the sea altogether, which to me is unthinkable, or continue Government operation, which I believe almost every Member of this House except those socialistic in belief will admit is inefficient and extravagant, as well as unwise, and I do not think creditable; or else some plan outlined as this bill proposes. For myself I am going to suggest that Government ownership at this time is not to be thought of. I am perfectly willing to go forward on the basis of this bill, and, as has been said before, whatever is to be paid by the Government toward the operation of the ships of an American merchant marine is a profitable business, as I think it will be returned ultimately to the Government. Otherwise I shall be greatly disappointed. [Applause.]

Mr. HIMES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I regret I can not. My time is up.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, to a stranger to our institutions and indeed to many who are familiar with our institutions it will surely seem very remarkable that an administration which only a few days ago was, if not wholly repudiated, at least wholly discredited should attempt with all the blandishments of Executive power to force through this Congress a measure to which it is tacitly admitted the great mass of the American people are opposed. And yet in the light of the history of one branch—or shall I say one element—of the Republican Party it is perhaps not strange that with the very death rattle in its throat it runs true to form and seeks to serve in its dying moments special interests and special privilege. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Of course, in a discussion on the rule one can not enter into the merits of the bill. I suppose it will be admitted—aye, claimed—that the President in his address to Congress yesterday presented the arguments in behalf of this measure as strongly as they have ever been presented and as strongly as they will be presented in whatever bodies may discuss it. It seemed to me to be a strong presentation if the premises be admitted, but we deny the premises. It also seemed to me that in some of the comparisons the President was singularly infelicitous. For instance, he compared that which is requested in this bill with the expenditures that have been made for public highways and for rivers and harbors. Surely no one will be deceived by that comparison. Public highways are built for all; rivers and harbors are improved for all commerce. You do not pay the truck man a subsidy for traveling over one of the highways that the Government builds. [Applause.] This is not a proposition for general public interest. This is a proposition for individual benefit at public expense.

It seemed to me also that there must be some doubt as to whether we could rely absolutely upon the assurance—and, of course, I do not mean to discredit the President's word in any way—that in no event would these expenditures exceed $30,000,000 and yet meet all the necessities that are claimed to exist. If that be true, then it seems to me the administration is driven to the position where it must admit that if now under the system under which these ships are being operated it is costing $50,000,000, but by turning them over to private ownership they can be operated for $30,000,000, then it is a tremendous reflection upon the administration of the Shipping Board as it now stands by the appointment of the present administration. [Applause.]

Oh, in very truth, this is the old, old fight. It is proposed to fix here a policy for 10 years, and which in all probability it is hoped means permanency, whereby the old Republican doctrine is to be carried out of taxing one man in order that another may thrive; to legislate in order that one group of men may live on the sweat of the brows of other men. That is the principle which is involved.

If the rule shall pass, of course, there will be more elaborate discussion of the bill in detail. I see no reason why the rule should pass. Some gentlemen who are opposed to the bill have said, "Oh, let us pass the rule and consider the measure." Why is it that we should pass a rule and consider a measure which we know the people do not want, to the exclusion of taking up business which we know the people do want? [Applause.] Why do not gentlemen who have made up their minds to oppose this bill in principle stop it now at the threshold by the defeat of this rule and let us turn to matters of greater moment for which there is a demand and upon which we could all agree substantially?

There are some objections to the rule itself. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] in his inquiry of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] pointed out one. This has been advertised as a very liberal rule. That will depend altogether. It has been advertised as a rule that does not restrict amendments. That will depend altogether. I do not know how many amendments are to be offered in this bill. It will depend altogether on whether the legitimate amendments have been reached by 4 o'clock on Wednesday afternoon as to whether it proves liberal.

There is another objection to the rule. That is the last amendment proposed, which makes in order the appropriations carried in the bill. This takes from the Committee on Appropriations the power given to it at the time the Budget was created, and around which in a certain sense the whole Budget system was builded. It is proposed now to give to a committee of the House a power which the House itself could not exercise under the general rules.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we are prepared here and now, that if our own minds have not prepared us the election has prepared us, to meet this proposition at the threshold and check it at this time by the defeat of this rule. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee yields back two minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] should endeavor to get a good deal of satisfaction out of the fact that the American people have not been altogether satisfied, because in 18 months the Republican administration and the Republican Congress were not able to cure all of the evils and all of the ills that eight years of Democratic administration laid upon the country. [Applause.]

I am not at all surprised that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], realizing that one of the greatest scandals associated with the Democratic administration had to do with the building of the merchant fleet, and that one of the most difficult and trying problems laid upon the Republican administration and Congress was that of determining what should be done with the wreck of a merchant fleet the Democratic administration left us, does not now desire to have that question brought up for consideration.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] would prefer to be able to say in the campaign two years from now that the Republican Party and the Republican administration had made no effort whatever to settle what is confessedly and admittedly and beyond all question and peradventure one of the greatest and most trying problems before the people of the Republic. It would be easier for him and his party if at the end of two years they could say, "The Republican Party and the Republican administration were confronted with the question of what should be done to save something out of the enormous expenditure of nearly $4,000,000,000 made by the Democratic administration for a merchant fleet. The Republican Party has made no effort whatever to settle that great question or to determine whether we are to have a merchant fleet and a shipping policy. The Republican Party has allowed the intolerable conditions which it inherited to continue without making any effort to cure them."

Of course, I realize that the gentlemen on the Democratic side would prefer to be in that position two years from now.

What is the question before us? Is it a question as to whether, lacking an American merchant marine, we shall now proceed to the building up of such a marine and to the establishment of a great shipping policy? That is not the question at all. As was very clearly pointed out by the President of the United States in his address to us yesterday, the question is whether we shall go forward in a constructive way, whether we shall continue a policy of obstruction, or whether we shall enter upon a policy of destruction. Those questions this Congress can not escape. The expenditure was made. The fleet, such as it is, was builded. We have it. It is on our hands. What are we going to do about it? There is some difference of opinion in the country as to what should be done. There can be no difference of opinion among honest men as to the absolute necessity of entering upon a discussion of the question with a view of settling it in the best possible way. Gentlemen may not favor this bill. Gentlemen may find some of its provisions are not satisfactory to them. But gentlemen can not escape—at least gentlemen on the Republican side can not escape—the responsibility of meeting this issue. The conditions demand it. The country expects it. And without regard to what gentlemen's views may be as to the wisdom of the legislation, it seems to me it is the duty of the Congress and of gentlemen on both sides of the House, realizing the situation, to meet the issue squarely and vote for the consideration of the measure.

The gentleman from Tennessee objected because there is a provision in the rule which makes in order an appropriation carried in the bill. I have some doubts as to the wisdom of that appropriation. I am not certain how I shall vote on that question, but I do know that in taking up an important matter of this sort the House should not bind itself in advance. The House should not allow one Member, touching this highly important matter, and in this one particular case, to say that the House, or a majority of it, shall not have an opportunity to modify or change the general rule. The House ought to have that opportunity, and therefore it is wise, it is essential, in the interest of a full and a fair discussion of the legislation, that the House should have an opportunity to determine whether or not that appropriation is justified and shall be approved. In conclusion may I say that without regard to what gentlemen's views may be as to the wisdom of the legislation as a whole or in part, they can not escape, it seems to me, the duty of giving this Congress an opportunity to express its will and judgment touching this highly important matter. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming yields back two minutes. The gentleman from Kansas has 16 minutes remaining and the gentleman from North Carolina 29 minutes.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL].

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] in making his statement seems to attribute the defeat of his party to the fact that all of the ills of the country were inherited from the Democratic administration which has been out of power for two years. I am very much surprised that the distinguished gentleman should come here at this time after the recent experience and offer that argument, because the same statements were made in every voting precinct in the United States to the American people and they repudiated that doctrine entirely. The party to which the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming belongs has been convicted upon the record that they themselves have made, and as a member of the Democratic Party I am indeed glad that this issue is brought to the attention of the American people at this time. If there is any one issue upon which our party can go to the country it is upon this ship subsidy bill. Of all the bad legislation that has been enacted by the majority party in this Congress, in my humble opinion this is the worst measure of all that they have presented for our consideration. [Applause.] Now, gentlemen of the House, to get down to the merits of the rule and this proposition, I wish to have the record clear, and I state that the members of the Rules Committee on the Democratic side voted solidly against reporting this rule to the House, and I am fully convinced that when the measure itself comes before the House the Democratic Party will be recorded against the passage of the bill. I am delighted to hear that so many Members on the majority side of the House will join us in their protest against this measure. I am not reliably informed as to the situation on the majority side, but I did read a day or two ago in one of the leading Republican papers of the country that after a careful canvass of the House the majority leaders hoped to put the bill through the House by a majority of 25 or 30. You have on this side of the House now something like 169 majority, and if you can not summon more than a measly majority of 25 on that side there must be something radically wrong with the bill. [Laughter.]

Now, gentlemen, one reason why I ask the Members of the House to vote against the adoption of this rule is because the bill that is now before the House is apparently a new bill; at least so I am informed by some members of the committee that reported it. A bill was drawn many months ago and thoroughly discussed in the committee, and was put before the people. Now, as I am informed, even as late as day before yesterday the committee took up the bill, made many important amendments to it, most of them very objectionable, that they were not even discussed in the full committee, and the new bill which this House has not had any chance to study or even read, because the bill was only printed yesterday, comes before the House and we are asked to adopt it under a special rule, a bill that the membership of the committee has not had time to consider. This special rule is for the consideration of a bill which the membership of the House has not had time to consider, and therefore I am opposed to the rule and would like to see it defeated and this matter postponed, so that the membership of the House may have time to give it full consideration.

I can not understand why the majority leaders in this House are so insistent on putting this bill through under a gag rule at this time, or under a special rule, to be polite about it. Why, let me call your attention to the fact that you will have a majority in the next House. You will have a Republican Congress in both branches. The President in the White House is of your political persuasion, and why just a few days after election, in which the people have passed judgment on this measure, do you bring in a special rule here, and why in an extra session of Congress called upon this particular bill to ram it down the throats of the American people when your own party is going to be in power for the next two years? That very procedure in itself would convince me and, I believe, any fair-minded voter or citizen in this country that there is something radically wrong somewhere in this bill that necessitates the calling of an extra session and bringing in a special rule and undertaking to force this bill through the House.

I can not see any necessity for the rule or any necessity for this procedure at this time. If there was to be a change in the administration or in the Congress there would be some justification for your stand; but with your own party in power, I can not see the necessity. Ah, gentlemen, the truth is that the leaders of the majority side know that with a majority of 169 there is such a revolution of sentiment in the Republican Party that you do not dare to submit it to the next Congress, even though you have a majority in that Congress. [Applause on the Democratic side.] My friends, therefore, to keep the record straight, I want to call attention to the fact that the Democratic Party in this House has voted in committee, and I hope will vote on the floor, against the adoption of the rule, and then let us line up our forces in opposition to the bill.

Mr. Speaker, one thing in the President's message to the Congress yesterday impressed me very much. He called attention to the deplorable condition of agriculture in the Nation. Nearly one-half of our population are engaged in agriculture. Every well-posted citizen in the United States knows that the farmers of the country under this administration have suffered a deflation of their property to the extent of billions and billions of dollars. The President of the United States in his message yesterday recognized that fact, and said that within a short time—no definite time being stated, but at some time in the future—he proposed to come before the American Congress and make some recommendations in behalf of the American farmers. Let me put this question to you: With the deplorable condition of agriculture, in which nearly one-half of our population is engaged, why does the President come before the Congress, after calling the Congress into extra session, and ask it to pass a bill for a Shipping Trust, which will amount to hundreds of millions of dollars, putting that amount into the pockets of the trust, instead of squarely meeting the situation and coming before the Congress and asking relief for agriculture and the farmers of the Nation? [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. President, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, under our system of Government the Chief Executive has the power, and one might say the duty, of coming before the Congress and presenting legislation to it for its consideration. During the past eight years, since I have been a Member of this body, the Executive has exercised that function a great many times. I have become more and more convinced that the Chief Executive, who is elected by the people, has the right to have such legislation as he may suggest considered by the Congress. As I say, he is the Executive, he is elected by popular vote, and it is his privilege to present an issue if he desires so to do. I have never felt that any member of the President's party should be bound by the President's expressed views, however, and while I shall vote for the consideration of this bill upon the theory that he has a right to present it to the Congress, I shall oppose its enactment because I do not believe in it, nor do I believe that the people of the country desire its passage.

Mr. JOHN M. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I have only a few minutes, but I am glad to grant the gentleman a second or two.

Mr. JOHN M. NELSON. The gentleman is on the committee. In section 403 of the bill I find the following language:

> All moneys in the fund are hereby permanently appropriated for the purpose of making such payments and the refunds authorized by subdivision (j) of section 416.

Does this rule safeguard that permanent appropriation?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I shall come to that in a moment, for I expect to discuss it if I have the time. To me the passage of this ship subsidy bill is a revival of the famous cost-plus system originated by Mr. Baker when he was Secretary of War, under which we wasted so much money in the construction of cantonments and in other governmental expenditures. The people of the country do not believe in the revival of the cost-plus system. They have had enough of it.

Of course, we have these ships. It cost the Government $3,000,000,000 to build them, and they must be operated in some way, either by the Government directly or through a ship subsidy. While in peace time I do not believe in initiating Government operation, yet the fact remains that we have these ships and it is a confession of inability on the part of this Republican administration if we say that the Government can not run those ships, now that we have them. You might just as well say that if the Government had constructed the railroads of the United States we would be compelled to turn them over to some private interest in order to run them at a profit after the Government constructed them. If we continue the policy of passing through the Congress of the United States measures that the people do not want and failing to pass measures that they do want, there will be no Republicans on this side of the House after a while. If we continue with this policy of not giving a bonus to the soldiers of the United States when the overwhelming public sentiment is in favor of it, and giving a bonus to men to run ships when the overwhelming public sentiment is against it, the party can not survive, and I submit to gentlemen on the Republican side of the House that this is the sort of measure, that ought to be defeated. [Applause.] That does not mean that we ought not to support the rule. This is a very liberal rule. This is the kind of legislative issue that Congress ought to meet squarely. This is no gag rule. Any part of this subsidy bill can be voted up or down, in or out, and no Republican need have any doubt that he will have a free and untrammelled vote if this rule be adopted.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JOHN M. NELSON] brings up the question of the appropriation that is in the bill. If we are going to have a ship subsidy measure, we might just as well appropriate the money now as to put it off and appropriate it year by year for 10 years, as we would have to do. If we are going to have a ship subsidy, if we are going to adopt this cost-plus system and pay somebody a percentage on the money expended by the Government to run these boats, and we are going to have to spend some money, we might just as well do it now for 10 years as to have this question come up here year after year.

Mr. JOHN M. NELSON. The gentleman does not answer the question. I asked whether this rule would protect this appropriation. I want to vote for the rule; I think it is liberal, but I understand a clause has been inserted which now removes the right of a Member to make a point of order against the appropriation.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. In my opinion, the gentleman is wrong about that. The right to make the point of order is lost, but any Member of the House may take the floor and offer an amendment when the measure is under consideration in Committee of the Whole to make an appropriation for one year or to strike out the entire appropriation, so that it would be necessary for the Committee on Appropriations to bring in another bill. The rights of the House are absolutely protected under this rule as it is presented, and I would say that if they had not been protected I am satisfied that the rule could never have been reported from the Committee on Rules. As it is presented, I can see no reason for opposition to the rule by any man who opposes the ship subsidy bill.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, no doubt Pikes Peak is one of the most prominent elevated points in the country, and from it one can see more United States territory on a clear day than from any other point in the Union. On the way to the summit of Pikes Peak there is what is called the halfway house. I am glad to note the arrival at the halfway house of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], and I believe that if he will continue along the line he is now traveling he will reach a point where he can really interpret the sentiments and feelings of the American people.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, it has been said that one can tell the same thing so often that finally he comes to believe it is true. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has been making the same talk here on this floor so often to the effect that the shortcomings of the Republican Party lie in the fact of its inability to correct the shortcomings of the Democratic administration—he has told that so often that in charity I really believe there is some thread of conviction in his heart as to that assumption. Now, he said that the result of the election only proved that the American people had not been satisfied because the Republican Party in 18 months could not have undone all that the Democrats did in eight years. Of course, perhaps the gentleman from Wyoming has rather a more vivid recollection than some of us as to how the American people do regard the record of the Republican administration and a Republican Congress. But the gentleman from Wyoming, as usual, undertakes in his sweeping charge regarding the shipping program to lay all the blame at the feet of the Democratic administration. Why, we remember here when a Republican Congress was elected in 1918—by the way, the Republican Party has had four years to rectify all these assumed evils instead of 18 months—you remember, on the Republican side of the House campaign orators were constantly vocalizing complaints as to the American program of shipbuilding during the war. Charges of graft, waste, crookedness, inefficiency, and all that kind of thing were indulged in on frequent occasions. And so, finally, there was a resolution introduced in this House to appoint a committee of four Republicans and two Democrats who were to undertake to investigate the program of shipbuilding under the Democratic administration. That committee was appointed by the present Speaker of this House.

The chairman of that committee was the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], the heir apparent to the Speakership. Mr. KELLEY of Michigan was on that committee, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER], the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HADLEY], four Republicans and two Democrats, and after months of exhaustive hearings here in Washington, hearings in New York, hearings in Philadelphia, after every witness who could be found throughout the country who either knew or was supposed to know or was accused of knowing anything about the shipbuilding program was brought before that committee, and after months of consideration, what did that committee find? I hold in my hand the report of that committee, known as the Walsh investigating committee. I can not read all, of course. But here is a significant clause from the concluding portion of that committee's report. I quote:

Considering the program as a whole (referring to the shipbuilding program under the Democratic administration) the accomplishments in the number of ships constructed, the tonnage secured, and the time within which the ships were completed and delivered, constitute the most remarkable achievement in shipbuilding that the world has ever seen.

[Applause.]

That is the language of the committee whose solemn duty it was to investigate and report upon those conditions.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield me one more minute?

Mr. POU. I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. That was the conclusion of the committee whose duty it was to report to the House upon that question, and I place that against the belated plaint of the gentleman from Wyoming, who comes now and seeks to justify the difficulties in which the Republican Party finds itself in this charge that has long since been barred by all the rules of political fairness and political justice—I place against that empty charge the report of his own committee which shows the Democratic administration and its record in building the fleet of ships which served the United States and our allies in the war and carried food, munitions, and equipment to Europe for the finest Army that ever gathered under the flag and made possible the triumph of our armies in the tangled forests of the Argonne—this committee said that that program was the greatest triumph of shipbuilding in the history of all the world, and I trust the gentleman from Wyoming and others on that side will not seek to belie the report of their committee by their belated partisan attacks upon a marvelous record. [Applause.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN]. [Applause.]

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, I should begin perhaps by congratulating the House and the Committee on Rules on the broadening of vision that seems lately to have possessed these lords of the articles. Instead of proposing that a measure of this character shall be passed under limitations which preclude and prohibit amendments from the floor, they are now graciously pleased to accord this body three days of its own time to consider amendments to the pending bill. With respect to the provisions for general debate, I think the rule is reasonable. I have no quarrel with the principle of intrusting a Committee on Rules in a body of this size with power to decide or at least recommend the order in which measures shall be considered from time to time. But I do most strenuously object to the action of the committee in imposing a time limit on the power of the House to consider amendments.

The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] with considerable courage has announced that he is determined to oppose this bill, yet he supports the rule because he believes that he and every Member who dislikes some of its provisions will have a chance to offer any amendment that he considers necessary. And the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], while not going so far as the gentleman from South Dakota, yet does confess to a qualm of conscience about a certain provision, and intimates that unless opportunity were afforded to quiet his scruples by an appropriate amendment he would not support the rule. What certainty has either one of them that the House will have a chance to consider his amendment? Suppose the amendment is not reached when the time limit has expired. What will then be his remedy?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCKRAN. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman evidently misunderstood. I defended the rule. I defended a certain provision of the rule against the attack of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. I said that provision of the rule was highly important in order to give the House, rather than one Member of it, an opportunity to determine what the House would do in regard to a certain provision of the bill.

Mr. COCKRAN. How does the gentleman know the House will have that opportunity? Suppose the amendment is not reached. What is the gentleman's remedy then?

Mr. MONDELL. There is only one way by which by any possibility the House should fail to reach the last paragraph of the bill, and that is by a filibuster.

Mr. COCKRAN. Oh, I want no explanation based on mere assumption.

Mr. MONDELL. A filibuster so objectionable as to prevent progress. But we do not propose to allow that filibuster to be successful.

Mr. COCKRAN. The gentleman makes a statement which is wholly gratuitous. He assumes the existence of a filibuster. The assumption is wholly unwarranted, extravagant, preposterous. The House can always put an end to a filibuster by passing the previous question. Even in committee it can at any time close debate. What I object to is this, that the Committee on Rules should undertake of itself to determine in advance of any action whatever by the House that it is likely to reach a stage of filibustering after a certain date, while as a matter of fact at that very time it may be considering meritorious amendments. The House itself is not left the power to declare when it has completed legitimate enlightening discussion and when, therefore, it is proper to close debate. Would the gentleman from Wyoming accept such an amendment as this to the rule now proposed, where it now provides that the House shall proceed to vote at a certain time would he object to adding the words "provided that all amendments then pending, which in the judgment of the Chair are not offered for filibustering purposes, are then disposed of"? Will the gentleman accept that?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It would give altogether too much power to the occupant of the chair.

Mr. COCKRAN. Oh, well, if this side is willing to trust the occupant of the chair with that power, I think the gentlemen can compose his nerves. [Applause on the Democratic side.] As a matter of fact the gentleman from Kansas stated here that this limitation is proposed because in his judgment three days afford all the time that is necessary for disposal of amendments. Who is he to decide that? Is he wiser than the House?

The House will be here always competent to decide that very question. Why should this House, now at the very beginning of these proceedings, without knowing how far amendments that may be offered will be helpful, informing, and meritorious—or the reverse—declare that at a certain hour they shall all be shut out and that the House shall proceed to vote then upon a measure which, according to the gentleman from Wyoming and according to the gentleman from South Dakota, may still be in crying need of amendment?

But, Mr. Speaker, to expect consistency from gentlemen supporting a measure of this kind would be something so extravagant that whoever expresses a hope of it by that fact disqualifies himself from any pretense of capacity to instruct or enlighten his neighbors. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] The whole proceeding, the bill itself, the President's speech, the speech of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], are all so self-contradictory, so utterly inconsistent with their own propositions, that they strikingly illustrate the inevitable power of truth to assert itself, even through men and through lips that are bent upon perverting it. There is not a proposition laid down by the President which is not controverted and exploded by the arguments with which he seeks to support it. I have not time to consider them all in detail, but the one which is featured most conspicuously in the newspapers friendly to this proposal will serve to illustrate what I say. I will state it fairly. The President declares that this measure is necessary to save our "genius" for marine transportation. In God's name, if we have genius for marine transportation, for what earthly reason do we want the crutch of a subsidy for it? This measure is intended not to vindicate or to maintain our genius for shipping but to impeach and deny it; to declare that by genius, by commercial skill and ability alone we can not maintain an American mercantile marine, and that our only chance of succeeding in it is to plunge our hands into the Treasury—that is to say, into the pockets of men who are in no way concerned in it, and to withdraw from them the profits of their industry and transfer these profits to an industry that can not maintain itself. That is the necessary effect of this legislation if it pass; no other result can possibly flow from it.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] says he is in favor of this measure because if the ships are to be administered by Government agency that would be in effect a direct subsidy to labor, and he wants to give the subsidy in a form where it will first pass through the hands of certain gentlemen who will take care that it all remains in the hands of those who first touch it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Why is it that every attempt of the Republican Party to help men who labor begins and ends by enriching somebody else? Was there ever yet a subsidy brought in under Republican auspices to help a struggling, poor, impoverished industry? Every one has been and always will be a grant to some concern already enormously rich. If you want to help an industry that is impoverished and in difficulty, go out and give a subsidy to the farmer for every bushel of wheat he raises. I think such a subsidy would be vicious, but it would be infinitely less vicious than this. It certainly is more important that wheat be produced from the ground than that ships should sail the seas under one flag rather than another. This measure is to preserve the genius of American shipping, according to its authors—to make American shipping live not by virtue of its own merits but by levying on the profits of other industries which support themselves. There is no other way in which subsidies can be paid. Industries can not all be subsidized. If they were, there would be nobody putting anything into the Treasury, but everybody would be drawing moneys out of it. And this manifestly would be impossible. Where a subsidy of any kind is granted it must be drawn from the proceeds of other industries which get no aid and which therefore really succeed through commercial genius alone. So that the effect of this legislation, instead of encouraging the genius for American shipping or "genius" for anything else, is to penalize genius that incapacity may be made profitable. That is your policy. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, I think it is safe to say that the question propounded by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL] as to why this measure is pressed now answers itself. Why do you press it now, when another Congress has been elected fresh from the people? I will tell you. You press it now because the new Congress is fresh from the people, and for that reason the new Congress would not permit the enactment of such an infamy as this. You are taking advantage of a feature of our Government—a feature that can not well be changed—which keeps a Congress in existence after its successor has been chosen because it is essential chiefly for the purpose of counting the electoral vote; for a body in existence with recognized authority is the only body capable of settling disputes rising out of a contested election. But when a lame-duck Congress is called in extra session to defeat the very purpose for what its successor was chosen, as in this case, then there may not be technical treason against the Constitution, but there is actual revolt against the spirit of our institutions. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, a good many people are fond of talking about the results of the late election. I think those gentlemen who have prospects of running for office again will perhaps be more susceptible to the lesson of that election than those upon whom the popular verdict has fallen with heavy, crushing, and final weight. Let me say to them that the verdict of that election is that this country is going to be democratic hereafter in fact as well as in name. [Applause.] And, mind you, I say that with very great deliberation, because I have seen it democratic in name, and with the Democratic Party in power, when it was not democratic in fact. Let me give this warning to both parties. This country has solemnly decided that it must be restored to its democratic foundation. The essence of democracy is contained in a very few words. No man must be permitted to take one dollar and enjoy it that is produced by the labor of others, or be deprived of one dollar that has been produced by his own labor. You can not pass this subsidy without taking the fruits of other men's labor and giving it to this bloated Shipping Trust. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] is always entertaining, whether instructive or not. [Applause and laughter.] It is a delight to hear him. The voice and rhetoric of the gentleman from New York have delighted audiences throughout the world. He justly enjoys the reputation of being one of the world's great orators; but we are dealing with a very practical question to-day.

First of all, may I advert to the provisions of the rule that have been mentioned in this discussion? The provision about which some questions have been asked and the only provision, I think, that has been criticized by gentlemen on the other side of the House is that provision that went into the rule by way of an amendment providing that any appropriation carried in the bill should not be subject to a point of order. That gives the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union an opportunity to pass upon that provision in the bill rather than the presiding officer, whoever he may be, during the consideration of the bill. Without that provision there is no question that a point of order would be made and that the Chair would pass upon it, and that he would, in all human probability, sustain the point of order. Leaving the proposition in the bill for consideration permits the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to say whether or not that provision as it is or as it may be amended shall remain in the bill. That is the whole thing, so far as that is concerned, and it is not depriving the House of any of its privileges or relieving it of its duties.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] criticizes the rule for limiting the time for considering the bill for amendments under the five-minute rule. The Committee on Rules has taken into account the number of pages in the bill, the debatable questions involved in the bill, and the number of amendments which were threatened—over 800—as a means of filibustering against the final passage of the bill. It was thought desirable by those responsible for the procedure in the House of Representatives that the consideration of this bill should be concluded before Thursday of next week. In order to do that the rule gave three days for the consideration of amendments. Now, there is no man in the House of Representatives who will say that germane or proper amendments to this bill, to any and all sections of it, may not be offered within that time. If gentlemen had 800 amendments for the purpose of filibustering against the final passage of the bill, that, of course, would make it impossible to reach all of the bill; but I assume that no such attempt will be made now, because the whole question of amendments is thrown open to the House, not alone to the committee in charge of the bill but to the membership, and the committee in charge of the bill has taken the amendments that it considered necessary and has incorporated them as a part of the bill and reintroduced the bill under another number in order to give the House the time for the consideration of the bill for amendments, as provided in the rule.

Now, just a word upon the condition that confronts us.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am sorry I can not yield. I have not the time.

No one can state as well as the President stated yesterday the situation that confronts the Congress and the American people at this time with respect to our shipping. If this were an original proposition I would not be here to-day and you would not be here to-day listening to me urging a special rule for the consideration of a bill providing for the adoption of a policy of this character. But we are here to deal with a concrete condition that exists in the country. We have over $3,000,000,000 worth of shipping property that must be dealt with by the Congress. The Executive can not deal with it without authority from us. That $3,000,000,000 worth of property is diminishing in value hour by hour. Over a thousand of the fifteen hundred ships that we have are at anchor, chained together, deteriorating in value every day, every week, every month, and every year, and it is only a question of a very short time until they will be absolutely valueless. Shall we do something to salvage that property? Shall we take up a bill that proposes a means of restoring that motionless fleet to the sea, of utilizing it, or shall we simply say that we refuse to take up the question at all? If we refuse to consider the question at all we admit the absolute impotence of the Congress to deal with such questions. I am not committed to the provisions of this bill. If any suggestion is made by any of the opponents of the bill, I am ready to give to such suggestion all the consideration to which it is entitled. I suggest that no man occupying the position of a statesman in the Congress of the United States can justify himself before the country or his constituents by simply saying, "I am opposed to this measure." He must say, "I am opposed to this measure because I have a better proposition to offer." If that better proposition is offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] or by any other gentleman I will vote for it. I will vote for it on a motion to recommit, I will vote for it as a substitute for this bill during its consideration, but the country is entitled to the work of statesmen in the consideration of this bill rather than the work of mere politicians. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. I suppose the gentleman is in the former class.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am going to vote my convictions, not as a politician but as I think the question before us affects the welfare of the whole country. I have voted for river and harbor appropriations, knowing that my constituents did not have a ship, were not interested as stockholders in a ship that would enter a port or sail into a harbor. I see no difference in principle between providing harbor facilities for the shipping interests of the country and providing that our own ships may use these facilities. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Would the gentleman favor a subsidy for steamboats that operate on the rivers that we improve?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have not come to that. If I ever have the opportunity, which is not at all probable, I will consider that question. I will not dodge it when it arises. [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, all great nations have sought the seas. Our Nation in the past has been able to expend its energies and invest its capital on the land. We are now a continent thickly inhabited by one hundred millions of people, and we reach the sea on three sides. It is as important to this Nation to-day as to any of the great nations of the past, or any great nations of the present, that our ships should sail the seven seas carrying outward and inward commerce, and in order to do that we must meet such competition as the other nations that sail those seas offer us. Every other great nation having ships upon the sea gives government aid to its shipping interests. Whether that be a subsidy, or whatever it may be, they give the aid.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 10, page 1, strike out the words "controlled and" and insert, after the word "equally," the words "between those in favor of and those opposing the bill and shall be controlled."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 11, after the word "member" insert "opposed to the bill."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 15, strike out the word "that" and insert the word "than" after the word "later."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, after line 6 add the words "that in the consideration of the bill any appropriations made in the bill shall not be subject to a point of order."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. POU) there were 124 ayes and 71 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 200, nays 110, not voting 121, as follows:

BLINDED, ARMLESS, AND LEGLESS VETERANS.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I call up from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 8062) amending subdivision 5a of section 302 of the war risk insurance act, with Senate amendments thereto, and move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York calls up the bill H. R. 8062, on the Speaker's table, with Senate amendments, and moves to concur in the Senate amendments. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman please give us a brief statement of what the Senate amendments are?

Mr. FISH. The original bill called for an increase in pay from $20 to $50 per month for the nurses and attendants of the blinded, armless, and legless veterans, and other totally disabled veterans of the World War. The Senate amendment simply strikes out the words "all other totally disabled veterans" and leaves the bill to apply to the blinded, legless, and armless, who number about 300. I am willing to concur with the Senate amendment, although I would prefer the more comprehensive terms of the original bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. There was one amendment which the Clerk read that strikes out $50 and inserts $20. as I understood it. To what does that relate?

Mr. FISH. That must be an error in reading.

Mr. BLANTON. The Clerk read such an amendment.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some misunderstanding with respect to this matter, and I shall withdraw my request until to-morrow.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. KLECZKA, until Friday, on account of death in family.

COMPENSATION AND MILEAGE OF SENATOR FELTON, OF GEORGIA.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, there was introduced on yesterday by the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] a Senate resolution reading as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate to Rebecca Latimer Felton $287.67 for compensation, and $280 as mileage, the same being amounts due her as a Senator from the State of Georgia from November 8 to November 21, 1922.

The resolution was appropriately referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I hope, however, that the resolution will not be adopted by the Senate. I trust that we shall not throw further confusion into the matter by now exhibiting some doubt as to whether Mrs. Felton was really a Member of the Senate from November 8 to November 21. If she were a Member—and the Senate so decided by admitting her and swearing her in—she is to be paid out of the regular appropriation, just the same as is every other Senator to be paid his salary. This is not a matter which should be charged against the contingent fund of the Senate at all. If the appropriations do not cover the item, it will be very proper for the Committee on Appropriations to bring in a deficiency item in the deficiency bill to take care of it. The payment should be made as the payment of the salaries of all Senators is made, not out of the contingent fund of the Senate, but out of the regular fund.

It occurs to me that the manner proposed in the resolution is not the proper way to take care of this particular item. I feel like saying that it would throw a very grave doubt upon the action taken by the Senate in seating Mrs. Felton as a Senator.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I desire to say that I introduced the resolution at the suggestion of the financial clerk of the Senate. Of course if he will pay the amount due Mrs. Felton without the passage of a resolution by the Senate authorizing it to be done, I shall be delighted, and I trust that this may be done and thus avoid the necessity of pressing the resolution.

LIBERIAN LOAN.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate and proceeded with.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 270) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a credit with the United States for the Government of Liberia.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Fletcher	McKellar	Shortridge
Bayard	France	McKinley	Simmons
Borah	George	McNary	Smith
Brandegee	Glass	Myers	Smoot
Broussard	Hale	Nelson	Spencer
Calder	Harreld	Nicholson	Stanfield
Cameron	Harris	Norris	Sterling
Capper	Heflin	Overman	Sutherland
Carraway	Hitchcock	Owen	Swanson
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Page	Trammell
Culberson	Kellogg	Pittman	Underwood
Cummins	Keyes	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Curtis	Ladd	Ransdell	Walsh, Mont.
Dial	La Follette	Rawson	Warren
Edge	Lodge	Reed, Pa.	Weller
Ernst	McCumber	Sheppard	Willis

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Secretary will state the pending question.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, when we adjourned last night it was with the understanding that the Senator from Mississippi would prepare a substitute for the amendment which he had previously proposed. The Senator has not yet arrived this morning, and I do not feel that we should go on with his amendment until he is present to offer the substitute for it which he desires to present.

Mr. HARRISON entered the Chamber.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Mississippi is now here.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I withdraw the amendment which I have heretofore proposed to the pending joint resolution, and move the amendment which I send to the Secretary's desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. At the end of the joint resolution it is proposed to insert:

To carry out the provisions of the act of February 17, 1911, "to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their locomotives with safe and suitable boilers and appurtenances thereto," as amended, as follows:

"For salaries of 35 additional inspectors whose employment is hereby authorized for nine months, at the rate of $3,000 per annum each, $78,750; for per diem in lieu of subsistence for said inspectors for nine months, $37,800; for transportation for said inspectors for nine months, $37,800; for allowances to said inspectors for nine months, $15,750; in all, fiscal year 1923, $170,100."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I trust the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi will not be adopted. We have already encumbered commerce with enough expense. I am opposed to increasing the number of officers beyond the necessary number for the transaction of any kind of business. Besides that, it does seem to me that the railroads should certainly have sufficient discretion to see that their rolling stock is maintained in proper condition. We need, rather, to decrease the cost of transportation instead of increasing the burdens and taxes of the people of the country. If we are ever going to stop piling up taxes, now is a good time to begin.

I think our Republican friends should take warning by what has just transpired, and that they should carry out some of the pledges of economy which they made to the people of the country. I am tired of business being tied down and impeded by so much governmental regulation. It seems to me that the railroads of the country, having operated for so many years, can certainly continue to do so without the additional burden which would be imposed upon them by the adoption of the amendment and the interference with their engines and other instrumentalities for the carrying of freight and passengers.

What we most need now is a reduction in freight rates and in passenger rates and not something which is going to increase our burdens and expenses by tying the hands of railroad officials. Indeed, transportation charges have become so high that one can hardly afford to ride on a railroad, and our products are rotting in the field at this time because of the high transportation costs. The cost of living is constantly increasing. It seems to me that we have reached a time when Congress should cease the creation of new positions. No doubt such places are created at the Government's expense for favorites who can not or will not make a living at private work. I refuse to take suggestions from the Interstate Commerce Commission or any other Washington body to create useless positions. I would much prefer the judgment of the engineer, who knows and operates his engine, than that of some theorist. We need common sense in business. This is another step tending toward Government ownership, which I am totally against.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am not the author of the pending amendment, but the amendment is an extract from a bill which I introduced some time ago, and I am very much in favor of its adoption.

I understand perfectly that the cost of government increases every year; that is inevitable. The history of this particular legislation may be very briefly stated. A few years ago Congress passed a law authorizing the inspection of locomotive boilers by a number of Federal inspectors. That was done in order to preserve the lives of those who travel upon railroad trains and also to preserve the property which was being transported. The outcome of that initial legislation was very gratifying. It was soon discovered that the railroad companies had not efficiently inspected and resolutely put aside the facilities that were unfit for use, and there were a great many lives saved and a great deal of property preserved by the original law.

The railroad companies were very much opposed——

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I will yield to the Senator in a moment. The railroad companies were very much opposed to the original enactment, but when, two years or two years and a half later, we came to expand the operation of the law so that it would embrace the supervision and inspection of the entire engine the railroad companies very frankly admitted that the service rendered had been invaluable and did not oppose the extension of the service to include the entire engine. I now yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator how he can demonstrate that a great many lives were saved and a great deal of property preserved by reason of the enactment of the law to which he has referred?

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator doubt that?

Mr. DIAL. Yes; I seriously doubt it. I do not see how it can be proved.

Mr. CUMMINS. I can only refer the Senator to the testimony of those who had to do with the operation of engines and to the comparison between the periods before and after the law was passed in order to establish the fact. I do not think that any railway employee or any railway manager will question the statement which I have just made.

The bill from which the amendment is taken was brought forward at the suggestion of the locomotive engineers and firemen, who are most directly involved in any accident which may occur to the boiler or to other parts of the engine.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I notice that for the salaries of inspectors there is provided an appropriation of $78,750, and then, in addition, a per diem, for which an appropriation of $37,800 is made; for transportation, $37,800, and for allowances, $15,750, a total of $91,350 for allowances of various kinds, as against $78,750 for salaries. I should like to ask the Senator would it not be entirely proper, inasmuch as the inspectors are inspecting property of the railroads, to require the railroads to give them their transportation? I should also like to have the Senator state, as I believe the amendment is taken from a bill introduced by him, what reason there is for the other allowances.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, answering the first question, I am opposed to compelling the railroad companies to furnish transportation to any Government employee. There ought to be a complete separation between the railroad companies and these governmental inspectors. If we require the railroad companies to furnish transportation, we in a measure link up the employee of the Government with the corporation, and, in my judgment, diminish to a degree the efficiency and the fidelity of the Government inspectors. That is the reason why there is a provision for transportation.

Mr. McKELLAR. I can see considerable force in that suggestion. I should now like to ask the Senator with regard to the allowances.

Mr. CUMMINS. We have now 50 inspectors. The country is divided into 50 inspection districts, and there is one inspector for each district. Under the present law each inspector is allowed $600 per year for his assistant or his stenographer or his helper, whoever he or she may be, and allowance includes, as I remember, the rent of the office in which the inspector is housed. Under the present scale of cost of buildings and rents and living, that allowance, in my opinion, is very inadequate, and it is proposed to be enlarged in order to meet the changed conditions of the present time as compared with the conditions when the law was originally passed.

I do not think there is anyone connected with the administration of the railroad law who does not recommend this legislation, who does not understand its necessity if we are to have efficient and constant inspection of locomotive engines, and I think it is due to the men who ride on the engines and drive them and the men who assist the engineers in the operation of the engines that they shall be protected just as far as the Government can protect them against imperfect and out-of-order engines.

I did not dream that this question would arise at this time, but if I had time to accumulate the evidence which has been taken before the committee of which I am chairman, in respect to the work which these inspectors have done, the number of engines which they have ordered out of service because they were imperfect, and, presumably, the number of accidents which have been averted, I believe the Senate would have no doubt whatsoever about the wisdom of this appropriation and this authority. If we are going to have an efficient constant transportation machine that will do its business with the fewest accidents and the least destruction of property, the amount of money that is here proposed to be appropriated can not be expended in a better way than to authorize these new inspectors and to increase the allowances for their expenses.

FRANCE AND GERMANY.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, we seem to be discussing a number of subjects that are foreign to the pending joint resolution, and I may be excused, therefore, for bringing in something which is also more or less foreign to it.

During the last few days America has been honored by a visit from a very distinguished French statesman, Clemenceau, the former prime minister of France, is in this country for the avowed purpose of setting before the American people certain criticisms of the policy of the United States, and in his opening speech he has expressed a willingness to exchange criticisms. It seems to me that this may be a good method to follow.

The great Frenchman who visits this country enjoys a wide popularity. My purpose in rising is not so much to criticize him but to state some of the widespread American criticisms of the present policy of his country.

If France were sending to this country a representative to plead with the American people for cooperation at this time, I think it would have been possible to select a man more appropriate for that service. While Clemenceau has not been known as an extreme militarist as compared with Poincare and some other Frenchmen he has established the reputation, in the conference for the peace treaty at Paris, of representing an extremely harsh policy toward Germany.

In his work on the Wreck of Europe, Nitti, the Italian statesman, frequently discusses Clemenceau. While I think at times he holds him too much responsible for French policy, I am going to insert without comment this extract from his book concerning the great Frenchman.

In his book The Wreck of Europe, on page 110, Nitti says:

All his life Clemenceau has been a tremendous destroyer. For years and years he has done nothing but overthrow governments with a sort of obstinate ferocity. He was an old man when he was called to lead the country, but he brought with him all his fighting spirit. No one detests the church and detests socialism more than he; both of these moral forces are equally repulsive to his individualistic spirit. I do not think there is any man among the politicians I have known who is more individualistic than Clemenceau, who remains to-day the man of the old democracy. In time of war no one was better fitted than he to lead a fighting ministry, fighting at home, fighting abroad, with the same feeling, the same passion. When there was one thing only necessary in order to beat the enemy, never to falter in hatred, never to doubt the surveness of victory, no one was comparable to him, no one could be more determined, no one more bitter. But when war was over, when it was peace that had to be insured, no one could be less fitted for the work. He saw nothing beyond his hatred for Germany, the necessity for destroying the enemy, sweeping away every bit of his activity, bringing him into subjection. On account of his age he could not visualise the problems of the future; he could only see one thing necessary, and that was immediate, to destroy the enemy and either destroy or confiscate all his means of development. He was not nationalist or imperialist, like his collaborators, but before all, and above all, one idea lived in him, hatred for Germany. To render her barren, to deprive her of her supports, to destroy her—this was the consummation of the war which was proposed in the treaty of peace, and he and the financiers who surrounded him were the true artificers of the treaty of Versailles and of the policy which is still in force.

That was the judgment of the former prime minister of Italy with regard to this great statesman who has now come to plead with the United States for cooperation in present conditions; and the same author quotes in several places that statement of Clemenceau in the Chamber of Deputies in which he declared, in defending his course, that—

The treaties are a method of continuing the war.

So, Mr. President, I deprecate somewhat the character of this messenger who has come from France to ask the United States to cooperate with France in peace; and yet Clemenceau is mild in his attitude toward Germany compared with the present governing authorities of France.

It has been said by our representatives in Paris, particularly by Mr. Baruch in his book, that Clemenceau lost his position and was succeeded by others because it was considered that he had been too mild in his treatment of Germany. I mention this so as to emphasize the fact that the present attitude of France toward Germany is the extremest of the extreme, and that, violent as Clemenceau was in exacting the terms of peace with Germany, he was mild compared with the present Government of France in carrying them out.

So I am not here, Mr. President, to criticize the great French statesman; and what I present is merely a criticism of the present policy of France toward Germany, which it seems to me must be amended before France or any of her representatives can in justice call upon the United States for cooperation.

From this speech which was delivered by Clemenceau in New York the other night I am going to read one or two short extracts; and first let me call attention to this one. He says:

I have some friendly criticisms to bring, and I think it is worthy of you and of me that we exchange them in this most democratic way.

There I find a direct invitation to the American people to exchange the criticisms that we hold on the present French policy with the criticisms which Clemenceau brings upon our policy; and just at this point I may be permitted to say that I myself have been a severe critic of the attitude of the United States in leaving Europe, in forsaking the work of rehabilitation there at the very moment when our great moral force was needed above all other things. I feel that our desertion of that great duty in Europe at that time is now being felt by us in a very material way in the shape of penalties. We discussed the ratification of that treaty almost solely upon the League of Nations, and on this side of the Chamber I think we made the mistake of discussing it almost altogether from the altruistic standpoint; but I believe the time has come when the American people have begun to appreciate the fact that our failure to continue the work which we had started in Europe by helping in the work of getting Europe upon her feet is now being reflected in the United States by a very disastrous depression of business which has been continuing now for two years, and which, in my opinion, is going to continue for a good while yet to come. We have felt the destruction of our foreign markets; we have found, month by month, a constant falling off in our commerce; and the future will attribute that in part to the fact that we have done nothing to assist in the rehabilitation of Europe.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Nebraska seems to agree with M. Clemenceau as to the proposition that the United States departed from Europe before it could in honor do so. M. Clemenceau seems a little nebulous about what the United States would have been expected to do had it remained in Europe. It seems to me, in the intelligent discussion of this question, where we are practically invited to return to Europe, that there ought to be some degree of accuracy as to what is expected of us. Does the Senator understand that what M. Clemenceau desires is that we shall ratify the Versailles treaty and return to Europe for the purpose of executing it as France is now undertaking to execute it?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, of course, I agree with the Senator from Idaho that the statements by M. Clemenceau are too nebulous and too indefinite to enable one to draw a very direct conclusion; but my purpose in rising to-day is to mention in the RECORD what I believe are insuperable obstacles which will prevent the United States from any cooperation with France toward Germany as long as the present destructive policy is pursued. I am not basing that opinion upon any friendship for Germany. I am not basing that upon any dislike of France. I am putting it solely and only upon the basis that the United States might be glad to cooperate with the rest of the world in bringing about an establishment of real peace. To secure such a pence the dominant power in Europe to-day, France, must abandon the present destructive policy toward Germany. As long as that destructive course is pursued it is useless to discuss the matter before the American people.

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator is of the opinion that under the present policy of France we can not very well cooperate with France?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am.

Mr. BORAH. When has that policy been different since the signing of the armistice?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I shall undertake to point that out to the Senator, if he will permit me.

A little later on in his discourse M. Clemenceau used this language:

> And now that we have peace, we must preserve peace.

It is a little inconsistent for M. Clemenceau to say that we have peace, when in his utterances in the Chamber of Deputies on several occasions he declared that "the treaty would be a means of continuing the war." But disregarding that, let us look at the methods which are now being adopted by the French Government. Let us see whether they tend to preserve the peace.

In the first place, France, in spite of the declarations of economists in all the countries of the world, continues to demand of Germany reparations that are absolutely impossible. That is the first obstacle. The demand has been of such a character, backed up by such conduct, as to warrant the suspicion, if not the belief, that France would rather have Germany fail in paying her reparations than to have Germany become commercially strong and able to meet reasonable reparations.

I thought I would insert in the RECORD at this time some evidence that Germany has paid all that could have been paid up to the present time. Numerous writers in all countries have stated that no power exists with which to get greater reparations out of Germany than have been paid up to this time, and I think it may be accepted as a fact, admitted by the intelligence of the world, that even if France should take military possession of Germany there would be no power in that occupation to wring out of Germany the reparations in accordance with the demands of France.

We behold in Germany a country at the present time which has lost about 7,000,000 of her population; which has lost 80 per cent of her iron-ore fields; which has lost almost her entire merchant marine; which has lost all of her colonies, and which has lost a large area of her country, so that in agricultural products the loss is even greater, in proportion, than the loss of population. So that at the present time Germany is able to raise only about 70 per cent, or at the most 75 per cent, of the food which her people need. Therefore, in the winter which is now coming Germany is entering upon a period of distress which inevitably will produce insurrection in that country, if not revolution. Only the other day we read in the papers of mobs gathering in the city of Cologne, I think it was, finally suppressed by the police; but that the mobs shouted only, "Hunger, hunger"; and that menace of hunger is coming upon Germany at such a rate that all who are able to get out of the country for this winter are doing so—getting into the countries adjacent thereto.

How is Germany to buy this 25 or 30 per cent of food which her people require to get through the winter? Germany has an export trade which is only half what it was before the war. Her export trade does not exceed her import trade. She can not pay in products because she has not any surplus products to sell. She can not pay in gold because Germany at the present time has only $238,000,000 available in her reserves that are at all identified and known. There may be gold buried in the ground, as there always is in time of war, but the available gold in sight is only $238,000,000, and Germany can not part with a dollar of that without endangering what remains of her commercial and financial fabric.

To say that a country afflicted like that, and situated as Germany is, producing and having a productive capacity of only about 60 per cent of her productive capacity before the war, could meet these enormous reparations that are demanded by France, is the uttermost nonsense, and all writers on economy and on politics all over the world have conceded the fact. Yet the demand is made insistently and is backed by the threat of military occupation. That is one indication that the policy of France is not calculated for the maintenance of peace but rather to the bringing about of war.

Another thing. Germany is now a republic. Yet what sort of a policy is France adopting? France is adopting the very policy which is likely to drive Germany into the hands of the militarists and the Junker class in Prussia or to drive her, in desperation, into the arms of the Bolshevists; whereas if France merely desires peace, the policy of France should be to do everything to maintain Germany as a republic, as it is at the present time.

So, I say, the first indication I see that France does not desire peace is this insistent demand for impossible reparations.

Mr. President, saying this, I know full well the need France has for those reparations. I know that the Government of France has indorsed something like a hundred billion francs of indebtedness issued to pay for reparations in the regions of France which need restoration. I know that the French Government has taken that great load upon itself to carry on the restoration in France which she had expected Germany to do. But the fact that she has had to do it instead of getting Germany to do it does not excuse an enlightened government for demanding an impossibility of Germany at this time.

That is not all. The demand of impossible reparations does not strike me as the only evidence that France has not shown any sincere desire for peace with Germany. Let me call the attention of the Senate for the second time to the greatly provocative and disgusting policy of France in maintaining colored soldiers, black troops, along the Rhine, quartered by the thousands in German cities and towns. At the time I spoke on this subject several months ago I did not have before me the language of this book, written by this eminent Italian, and my information concerning the black troops was somewhat limited. Nitti, evidently after an investigation, in referring to the black troops on the Rhine, in several places in his book uses language some of which I will quote at this point. He is citing a number of causes which are leading to the wreck of Europe, and among others he cites this great moral cause:

> The moral level of Europe is daily being lowered. The policies pursued toward the conquered have no parallel in modern history. Along the Rhine some of the most progressive cities in the world have been placed under guard of black troops of inferior race, and they are guilty of every form of violence, which they commit not through necessity but with the desire to insult and outrage. The conquered are deprived of their wealth by means of all kinds of parasitism and commissions of control, which in reality often amount to spoliation, and the methods employed bring back to mind the worst phases of the Middle Ages.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator as of what date that statement was made?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. This is in the American edition, which appeared in this country in March, 1922. I realize what the Senator probably has in mind—that is, that possibly the black troops have been removed.

Mr. POMERENE. I had in mind that some statement was made on the floor of the Senate to the effect that they had been removed; but I did not remember the date.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The first inquiry I made on the subject was, I think, nearly two years ago, and at that time I was informed that the black troops had been removed, and there have been newspaper statements since the speech I made in the Senate, and even cablegrams from Europe, to the effect that the black troops had been ordered to Asia Minor, which, if they can not be kept in Africa, is probably the best place for them. But I have learned since that time that that has not been carried out, or at least it has not been carried out fully.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment on that subject?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. SPENCER. As a matter of fact, there are black troops on the Rhine to-day, but not of African descent. The Moroccans, the Arabs, are still there in some numbers. The War Department and the State Department both looked into the question of their conduct along the Rhine, to which the Senator so graphically alluded, and the result of the investigations of both the departments was that the conduct of the black troops was quite as good as the conduct of any body of troops assembled together. Originally there were black troops of African descent, but, with the possible exception of purely negligible clearing-up squads, they have all been relieved, and there are none of them there now. The Arabs are there, but so far as their conduct is concerned it is as good as that of other troops. The head of the foreign department of Germany officially declared some months ago that he regretted exceedingly the propaganda with regard to the conduct of the black troops on the borderland, because it was unfair and it was hurting the incoming guests, or visitors, who naturally would want to see that beautiful part of the Rhine. I think that is the situation to-day.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If they have been removed, it has been very recently. I will read something on the subject of the different African troops which have been there; but there really can not be any question as to the outrages that have occurred. They are vouched for by Nitti in this work, and they have been vouched for in so many different records that I can not think that they can be disparaged with any success. The matter has been so serious, as has been described, that a number of the towns along the Rhine have been compelled to levy taxes on their people for the purpose of building public houses of prostitution in order to protect their women folks, and an American who was present in several towns and saw the sights said it was disgusting to see the black troops line up there on pay day in the street in front of those houses waiting for their chance to get in.

Such a condition of things as that is unspeakable, and it is something in which civilized people all over the world are interested. It is a matter in which the United States has an interest, because the United States is in part responsible for the army of occupation being there.

On page 236 Nitti says:

> And as the final insult to the conquered in the army of occupation backward races are represented. Thus the most cultured cities in Europe have been and are under negro violence which has been guilty of the most serious crimes. The German population has been subjected unnecessarily and, in order to satisfy the desire to offend, to physical and moral trials unknown for centuries in civilized countries. In April of 1921 there were still on the Rhine 14 or 15 colored regiments, 9 to 10 from Algeria, 2 from Tunis, 3 from Morocco, and 1 from Madagascar. There still remain, after the departure of 2 Senegalese regiments, some negro detachments.

They were taken out at one time, and then they were brought back this year. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] need not shake his head at me. I have had correspondence from reliable people in the occupied zone who have seen the troops there, and I have the impression that one reason why the withdrawal of American troops was delayed was because the American officers notified our Government that their places were being taken by black troops this year.

Mr. SPENCER. May I say to the Senator——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me finish this quotation and then I will yield to the Senator.

> There still remain, after the departure of two Senegalese regiments, some negro detachments. Documents have shown at length what outrages have been perpetrated by the troops of occupation and what crimes the negroes have committed. Henceforth everybody knows that the occupation has no military aim, but (like the confiscation of the Saar coal and the pretext of enormous indemnities and the splitting up of upper Silesia) only one aim is kept in view: Germany must be forced to the point of moral exhaustion and her unity in sentiment, and indeed even her political unity, broken.

I would like M. Clemenceau to justify before the American people in his next speech the putting or keeping of negro troops or the troops of any inferior race as an army of occupation among a white people. It can not be justified. There is no real reason for it, no military reason for it, and the conclusion is almost inevitable that it is done to goad the German people to violence in order to give an excuse for a military occupation of German territory.

I now yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not wish to enter into any controversy with the Senator, and I do not do so. I sympathize very strongly with his views. The presence of negro troops might be and is exceedingly objectionable, but the troops, when they are seen in assembly, are not negro troops. If the troops were quartered in southern cities they would not bear the faintest trace of negro troops. Their complexion is light. Their conduct is very good. Their speech is not at all African. It is the Moroccan or the Arab. They are educated and a higher class of people. Negro troops are not there. I do not mean to say there may not be a squad here clearing up what is left to be done, or a detachment there, but it is negligible. The troops there now are Arabs or Moroccans. They are not the Senegalese. They are not the African troops.

The War Department made an exhaustive study of the matter and reported clearly that wherever there had been an outrage, as there were, and wherever there was conduct that needed to be punished, and there had been, it had been promptly taken up and the offender had been severely punished, and that discipline among these troops measured well as compared with that of any other troops. I merely state that because I know the Senator from Nebraska wants the facts as much as I do.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In my former speech on the subject I introduced some statistics which the Senator from Missouri would do well to look up. He made a brief visit to Germany and comes back with a certain impression. It may be that just at the moment there are no negro troops there, but if they are not there it is due to the protest which in this country has been made against them, and it does not do away with the fact that the motive for putting them there has not been explained. Why does a country desiring peace with another country, as Clemenceau says, put such an insult upon her neighbor's people? Why does it incite a violence, as it would by putting these half-civilized troops in a military occupation over white people? Even if they are not there at this moment, that does not do away with the necessity for some explanation to the world as to why they were put there.

Mr. BORAH. I think the Senator has a misunderstanding of what M. Clemenceau means by peace with Germany.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am a little afraid the distinguished statesman from France wants us to maintain an armed peace; that he wants us to help France to dismember Germany. I think that is the present policy. I think that is the intention of the French Government. I hardly think it can be the intention of the French people. There must be somewhere a French statesman who will rise and advocate a more reasonable policy. There must be somewhere in France French statesmen who will realize that Germany can not be destroyed as a great factor in the world without breaking other nations down, too, and France among them. The ruin of continental Europe is coming when Germany goes to smash, and, far away as we are, we in the United States have a direct material interest in that catastrophe, if it ever comes.

But now, Mr. President, just take a very recent act of the French Government as indicating the attitude toward the German people. Does it look as though the Government of France desired real peace with the people of Germany when we take into account the monument which was erected on armistice day on the German border? On this last armistice day on the German border a slab was erected bearing this inscription:

> Here on the 11th day of November, 1918, succumbed the criminal pride of the German Empire, vanquished by the free people it sought to enslave.

That flaunting of a spirit of hate in the very face of the German people is not calculated to promote real peace. When two great peoples want to have peace with each other they drop the sentiments of hate. So Argentina and Chile did when after their wars they erected by joint action a monument upon the boundary between them. Did they put up any such slab as this, recalling the hate and vindictiveness of the past? No; they erected a bronze statue of the Christ, symbolical of peace on earth and good will toward men. But how can Clemenceau justify the erection of such a slab as that in the very face of the German people at the national boundary line? So I say that if there is a real desire for peace in France and if France wants the United States to assist in maintaining that peace France and Clemenceau will have to explain why these acts are committed which tend to goad people on to continued hate of each other.

In another part of his speech Clemenceau used this language, which sounds very much more like sanity:

> Now, I say that after such a war men can not continue to fight each other; they can not fight forever. There are, after all, two Germanys. There is the Germany which is a democratic Germany, which, I think, could, more easily at least, be called to reason.

Now, Mr. President, that is an indication of the statesmanship of to-day. There are two Germanys. There was the old Germany which is dead; at least it has fallen, and it will remain fallen if the German people are permitted to erect their republic on its ruins and to maintain that republic. But how can the German people maintain that republic shackled and crushed as they are by the present attitude of France toward Germany? How can the republic live in the face of its people when it is compelled to submit to insults, when it is compelled to submit to impossible demands, when it is compelled to see 60,000,000 people, prone and helpless, deprived of a chance even to revive their business and put themselves in a possible position to pay the reparations? The attitude of the French Government is such as to destroy all chance of Germany becoming a permanent republic in the world. There are two Germanys, and if the opportunity is given this Germany will be a republic, as much a republic as France, as much a republic as the United States, but it can not remain a republic, it is bound to be driven into bolshevism or militarism by such policies as are maintained at the present day by the French Government.

In another part of his address M. Clemenceau said that he wants America to resume conversations with Great Britain and France. His language was this:

If America could take upon it some way to renew conversations with England and France, not to give a promise of anything that would engage the future that she had not engaged during the war.

Now, that would be a consummation devoutly to be desired.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the United States should enter into some sort of conversation with the powers of Europe and use her moral force to bring about a real peace and a real rehabilitation, founded upon justice and good will, I think it would be a great duty of the United States to do it. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. There again M. Clemenceau is studiously obscure, apparently. What does he want the United States to do? What is it that the United States can do under the present policies of France? Of course, the only inference which can be drawn is that the United States is to go to France to enforce the present policies of France. There is no intimation and no suggestion in the distinguished visitor's speech that France proposes to modify or change her policy. There is no suggestion that there is anything going to be done upon the part of France in regard to this situation. France has her policy and seems to be determined upon it, settled in regard to it, and what we are invited to do is to go there and to enforce that policy.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I agree with what the Senator from Idaho says in that respect, but I think M. Clemenceau, when he invited countercriticism, possibly had in mind the fact that some criticism might be forthcoming as reasons why the present policy of France could not be approved in the United States. I am seeking to afford some of those reasons.

Right on that point let me say that I can not conceive it possible that the United States would be justified in doing the least thing to uphold France in her present policy until she agrees to disarmament. France in that matter has taken a position which has practically stopped any attempt to disarm the nations of the world. She sent her delegates over here to discuss disarmament at the disarmament conference, which was largely a product, I may say here in passing, of the efforts of the Senator from Idaho, but when her delegates came here, while they grudgingly consented to discuss naval disarmament, they absolutely refused to consider military disarmament, and we now learn through the press that France is not going even to ratify that part of the agreement which provides for naval disarmament. Mr. President, the United States can not afford to give any moral support to a country which persists in pursuing a course of militarism and conquest. At the present time France is maintaining an army of 700,000 men, and possibly more—the largest army ever maintained by any nation in time of peace; larger even than the German Army was when Germany was preparing for war. The British Army has been reduced to something like 200,000 troops; our Army in the United States has been reduced to something like 125,000 troops; Germany has been forced to reduce her army to 100,000 troops.

Mr. President, at this point I wish to call attention to the fact, and I wish to call it to the attention of M. Clemenceau himself, that when the treaty of Versailles was adopted there was inserted in Part V of that treaty the following language:

In order to render possible the initiation of a general limitation of the armaments of all nations, Germany undertakes strictly to observe the military, naval, and air clauses which follow.

That is to say, Germany agreed to disarm to the extent of making her forces 100,000 men, and Germany has done it. She was forced to do it, whether she did it willingly or not; but what has France done to carry out that plan? France was morally bound to agree to observe the terms of Part V of the treaty of Versailles. It was for the purpose of enabling her to disarm that Germany was required to disarm. France, however, has not only failed to disarm, but has increased her military establishment above anything ever before known, and has encouraged Poland to maintain an army of several hundred thousand men, Rumania to maintain an army of 160,000 men, Belgium to maintain an army of 113,000 men, and other nations in proportion, while Germany has reduced her army to 100,000 men and is practically helpless to-day. Hungary has reduced her army to 35,600 men; Austria has reduced her army to 21,000 men, and Bulgaria has reduced her army to 23,000 men. So while that part of the treaty of Versailles has been carried out so far as the defeated nations are concerned, France has utterly refused, and not only refused but has defiantly refused, to do her part toward disarmament. I should like to say to M. Clemenceau that I believe there will be no sentiment in the United States in favor of supporting the French policy until some serious effort shall have been made to carry out the clause of the treaty of Versailles which implied disarmament.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator from Nebraska is a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and I wish to ask him a question for information. We adopted what was known as the four-power treaty some time ago, and the principal plea for its adoption was that it would rid us of the menace of the Anglo-Japanese treaty. Is it not a fact that with the expiration of to-day the Anglo-Japanese treaty again goes into effect for another year, inasmuch as France and Japan have failed to ratify the four-power pact?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am unable to answer the Senator's question. I have not had the matter called to my attention and have not examined it; but I think what he has stated is a very interesting contribution, if he is correct.

Mr. GLASS. My information is that with the expiration of to-day the Anglo-Japanese treaty again goes into effect; so the chief reason presented for the adoption of the four-power pact falls to the ground.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, there is another matter which is not of such direct application, perhaps, but yet I think the people of the United States have been a good deal shocked by the disposition of France to buck Turkey in the recent wars she has been conducting and which have resulted in the reestablishment of the Turkish Empire in Europe, to continue, as has been continued in times past, that menace to all the neighboring countries. France for some reason saw fit to adopt that policy toward Turkey; and, while that is not involved in the immediate question of her policy toward Germany, I think it is a deplorable fact which the American people, who sympathize with nations which are oppressed by Turkey, resent.

Mr. President, I think I have said about all I care to say in reference to this matter. I do not feel justified in resenting the presence of M. Clemenceau in this country. From his standpoint, no doubt, he comes entirely justified. He feels that he is here on a worthy errand. He is a very old man and a man who has served his country faithfully. He has a right to come here either as a private citizen or an unofficial representative of his country in order to present to the people of the United States the appeal of France for our sympathy and our support; but I think he ought in his addresses in this country to meet the questions which I have to-day presented: Why does his country pursue these policies which are against the peace of Europe, which are obstacles to the peace of Europe, and which in some respects are almost certain to produce further war and further destruction?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in view of the able presentation of the subject I had in mind by the Senator from Nebraska, it is my purpose to discuss it but for a very few minutes. He has correctly stated that our distinguished guest is a very great figure, one of the three or four dominant figures in the world to-day. His age, his distinguished career, and his conceded great ability entitle anything he may say to most courteous and serious consideration.

I have read his address in New York with some degree of care. I must say that it was a little difficult at first reading to gather his views, and it was not much less difficult upon second reading. But some things seem apparent. One gathers from the address as a whole his view that we abandoned Europe before we could honorably do so; secondly, that by reason of such action upon our part we destroyed the economic life or solidarity of Europe; and third, that the present condition of suffering in Europe is due to our failure to discharge our duty toward Europe.

I read a paragraph or two which seem to justify the construction I have placed upon his address. Before leaving Paris in an interview which he gave to the country he said:

I will not touch specific matters, such as interallied debts, but will keep to the main fact, namely, that America has not stood by her allies in peace as she did in war and that she was wrong in quitting.

In his address in New York night before last he said:

You left after the contract was finished and you said "execute it as you may." • • • And you were wrong in that you left without any proposal whatever. • • • You broke all the organs of economic solidarity. • • • You, indeed, showed a touch of economic imperialism when you left us after the war was over directly. You have the best resources in the world.

That is a feature of his address which should not be overlooked.

In New York last night he spoke again before the chamber of commerce, and in that address repeated—

It was the greatest mistake and the source of all the evil that is taking place now.

That is, the mistake was to leave without any proposal of an adjustment of matters. He says:

I want you to interfere in Europe because you left it too soon. I want you to come back.

So it is quite plain that the first message which he brings to us as a people is as to our act of dishonor in abandoning our allies at a time when we could not properly do so. There is an attempt upon his part then to assess all the suffering and misery now prevailing in Europe to that act of dishonor upon the part of the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. How does the Senator construe the statement just read from M. Clemenceau? Does the Senator think that he meant that we should go back to France with our Army?

Mr. BORAH. I am coming to that.

Mr. SMOOT. Or that he desires us to furnish them more money, to be expended in any way they may desire, to carry on their commerce or otherwise? Will the Senator cover that point later?

Mr. BORAH. In that respect M. Clemenceau is a little indefinite; but I take it that his mind is the same as it was when they were asking us to go into the league—that they would settle what we would do after we joined.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, so long as France is spending 5,500,000,000 francs a year on her army, when I read the speech I took it that M. Clemenceau desired that we send over 100,000 men to take the place of some of the soldiers who are now being paid by the French Government and relieve France of that expense.

Mr. BORAH. I presume the Senator has the correct construction. It is a pretty serious charge, Mr. President, for a guest—although we are very glad to have him here—to say to the country which he is visiting that the fearful misery and unspeakable conditions which now obtain in Europe are the direct result of the dishonorable policy of our country, because our action could not be honorable upon the basis on which it is presented to us. We did not leave at a time when we were not permitted to leave, with all due respect to the view of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], and I am perfectly satisfied that the present conditions in Europe do not arise by reason of our act. I think the statement made by M. Clemenceau is as unfounded as it is ungrateful.

The United States went to Europe to participate in a war for which in the first instance the United States was in no sense responsible, a war which grew out of the system and policies which had prevailed in Europe particularly for the last 25 years, a direct result of the policies which obtained there. The war came as a result of those policies, and it progressed to such a point that the American people took part in it. It is pretty well conceded that by reason of their participation they assured victory to the Allies. We sacrificed hundreds and thousands of American soldiers. We contributed a vast amount of money. We were certainly a dominating factor in the determination of the war upon the part of the Allies. We came home without asking reparations, damages, territory, compensation, or anything else of that nature or kind. Having won the victory or made victory possible, having expended vast sums of money and sacrificed thousands of lives, and having left all damages and vast territories to our allies, we are now told we abandoned our allies in dishonorable fashion.

The cause of the disastrous conditions in Europe I will discuss a little later.

The fourth proposition which seems to be clear from M. Clemenceau's speech is that we should now guarantee the boundaries of France; that we should undoubtedly go there with our Army, with our men, with our military force; in other words, that we should give a guaranty, which guaranty would necessarily have to be backed up by military force under the present policies of France.

The fifth proposition which M. Clemenceau submitted to us was that the Monroe doctrine is obsolete; that it was a very good doctrine for the country when it was young, but—to use his expression—the doctrine of a child or the policy of a child is not the correct doctrine or policy for a mature man.

We are advised, therefore, that this policy, which is purely an American policy, distinctly an individual policy, so far as the Nation is concerned, and one which has been very highly prized by the people of the United States, and which, in my judgment, is still a cherished policy, is now obsolete—an interesting suggestion.

The sixth proposition which M. Clemenceau seems to make clear is that we should assist in enforcing the German treaty as it now exists. There is no suggestion upon his part that France is to modify or mollify her views with reference to the German treaty, or modify the treaty, or consent to its modification. There is not the slightest suggestion of any change of policy upon the part of France with reference to any of these matters concerning which we would be expected to take part. In other words, we are expected to go there with money and men to enforce the German treaty; and to enforce that treaty, in my humble opinion—and that opinion is buttressed by the opinions of men very much more able than I to pass upon such a question—would be the utter destruction of Europe. It would lead to economic chaos, to the breakdown of the whole social and economic fabric of Europe. It would result ultimately in the governments taking possession not only of Germany and administering a government over her people as a subject people but of Austria, Hungary, and perhaps other European countries. Unless, as was suggested by the Senator from Nebraska, there should be a complete change of policy—which is not suggested—this could be the only result of our going into Europe. We are invited, therefore, to do that which will not bring peace, not help the suffering masses, but to enforce a treaty which means greater suffering, more misery—an intolerable condition of affairs which language is inadequate to portray.

As I intimated a moment ago, it is not averse to me to have M. Clemenceau visit this country. We recognize in him a most distinguished figure in world affairs; but I do submit that if he is bringing to the American people a message calculated to bring about cooperation between the two powers it would be wise if he would suggest some modification of a policy upon the part of France which is bringing Europe to utter ruin.

Then M. Clemenceau advises us that we are on the verge of another war. I think probably we are. The outlook is rather discouraging. We are on the verge of another war by reason of the same policies which brought on the war in 1914. The same militaristic, imperialistic policies of the dominating powers which brought on the war of 1914 are again breeding war in Europe; and unless those policies are radically changed, in my humble opinion, at no distant day the world, or a large portion of it, will be engaged in another great conflict. Indeed, Mr. President, we have never had peace. War has continued practically from the signing of the armistice until now in some parts of Europe, and in a large portion of Europe; and the conflict has been the result of the policies pursued by the dominant powers, and not by reason of any failure of the United States to remain in Europe.

M. Clemenceau complains that the people of the United States look upon France as a militaristic nation. There is a belief of that kind in this country, and it grows day by day. I do not assume that the French people as a people are militaristic. I do not know whether that is true or not. At least, there are not sufficient facts in my possession to justify me in making any such charge as that. The French people as a people may be free from the militaristic spirit; but there can be little doubt in the mind of anyone that the governing power of France, the official power of France, is militaristic. The evidence of that fact is upon every hand.

Some three years ago the ex-President of the United States, Mr. Wilson, wrote a letter to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], which letter was made public, in which he advised us that the military power, the militaristic forces, had taken control of French affairs and of French policies. That called forth at the time some criticism of the author of the letter here in the Senate Chamber; but he was in a position to know. Undoubtedly he would not have stated what he did without ample facts to justify him, and subsequent events quite well justified the statement which he made at that time. Whatever may have been the sentiment of the French people as a people, the letter stating that the militaristic forces had taken control of the policies of France was well justified. Indeed, Mr. President, in that respect France is not different from other countries. I do not know of any country that has not somewhere in it a very strong militaristic force, a people who believe in a strong military policy. We are not an exception to it in this country. It is certainly true with reference to other great countries which I might mention; but the point that now concerns us is that that influence now controls and dominates the policies of France, and there seems to be no reasonable ground upon which to assume that they will within any reasonable time be without control.

We all recall the first meeting of the League of Nations at Geneva. A resolution was offered to the assembly looking to a program of disarmament. In the first instance the resolution was comparatively mild. It really provided for nothing more than formulating a program of disarmament; but it was objected to, and finally it was modified, and modified again, until, as Lord Cecil said, it was nothing more than a pious expression of the hope that at some time the nations would disarm. But even that resolution, simply indorsing the moral proposition of disarmament and expressing the hope that at some time the nations of the earth could come around to an agreement for disarmament, was voted against by France, and she organized against it a force of some five or six votes. It was in effect stated there at the time that France was not in a position to consider the proposition even as a moral proposition, let alone a binding proposition in the immediate future.

We also remember, as has been said by the Senator from Nebraska, the attitude of France at the peace conference in Washington. When I had the honor to introduce that resolution here in the Senate I left France's name out of the resolution. I did so in the belief that France would not be a willing coadjutor in disarmament. It was perfectly apparent to me, as I stated here upon the floor of the Senate, that France was not in favor of disarmament, or even in favor of any steps being taken in that direction; but it was thought wise elsewhere to include France, and France came. She was the discordant note from the beginning to the end of the disarmament program, in some instances putting almost insurmountable obstacles in the way of any practical results whatever. At least it was known, understood by the world, and practically denied nowhere, that France was against any program of disarmament that amounted to anything; and not only disarmament with reference to those things concerning which she might have claimed in view of her relationship to Germany but concerning those matters which were more immediately related to naval disarmament.

Mr. President, the disarmament treaties were made; and where are they? As I understand, they are resting in the pigeonholes, if not some less desirable place, of the Assembly of France. It is almost a year since they were made. They have been ratified in this country. We were informed that speedy ratification was desired to enable the other countries, knowing our attitude, to follow quickly in our wake. But they have been laid aside, and the latest information is that they are not to be ratified at all. The Assembly of France adjourned last summer, with the treaties still in the committee, and we were advised by the Associated Press that they had not even been considered in the committee. So there is some reason for the American people to feel that possibly France is militaristic. We will be glad to have the distinguished visitor state the exact attitude of France with reference to the question of disarmament, with reference to the treaties which are now pending, and with reference to her position upon the subject generally.

Then, Mr. President, we recall that at the Genoa conference Russia suggested that among the other things to be considered the subject of disarmament be at least discussed to see if we could not arrive at some basis upon which the armaments of Europe could at least be lessened. Russia at that time was reported to have nearly a million men under arms, and Russia suggested that the question of disarmament be taken up. It was said that Russia was acting in bad faith. But who knows? Her bad faith did not have time to exhibit itself, because immediately, and with some degree of asperity upon the part of the representative of France, it was said that that subject would not even be considered, and could not be considered at the Genoa conference.

The Senator from Nebraska has also referred to the attitude of France at this time with reference to Turkey. A business man of this country who was over in that part of the world several months before the situation became so acute, and who had been there for several months, advised me as to what was going to happen, that France was shipping arms in secrecy and under cover of label of other goods to Turkey. He declared that inevitably that kind of encouragement and that program would lead to a condition which would, in his opinion, result in war. Just how near we are to a conflict in that region of the world no one knows, but we all know that it is sufficiently menacing to cause consternation throughout the civilized world.

Here let me pause to say that it is almost capable of mathematical or logical demonstration that the situation in the Near East is due to the policies which have been pursued by France and England in that region of the world. Such policies would inevitably lead to conflict.

M. Clemenceau also feels aggrieved that we think that France is imperialistic. Her conduct in Syria can only be justified upon principles of imperialism, and the most obnoxious and indefensible imperialism. If there was one pledge made in the war that was distinct, clear, beyond all doubt, it was the pledge which was made to the Syrian people that they should have their independence, that they should be a self-governing people after the war. They understood it that way. They fought upon that basis. Their soldiers were willing to suffer and die upon that theory. Both France and England entered into that agreement or understanding.

It was by reason of the violation of that plain agreement with reference to Syria, and the violation of a similar understanding with reference to Mesopotamia upon the part of England, and their conduct in Egypt, that the entire spirit of the Islam world was aroused and they lost their faith in the governments of the white people. If that fanaticism, kindled by religious zeal, added to the belief that they are fighting for their independence, once gets into action in that portion of Europe, we will have a conflict which will be equal to the one through which we have just passed. There are millions and millions of those people who are now aroused over what they deem the injustices to them and the breaking of faith with them during the war.

Those nations now are in Mesopotamia, holding it by force of arms, and in Syria, holding it by force of arms. I have upon my table here the last dispatch from Syria, showing that they are manifesting in most earnest fashion their disapproval of the mandate and their contention for their independence. They are not only holding them in subjection by a military force, but they are exploiting their natural resources, which they have no more right to take from those people than I would have to reach into your pocket and take your means from you. Those natural resources belong to those people; they are associated with their future prosperity and their future welfare; yet, under the color of a mandate and under the color of protection, their natural resources are now being taken from them. That is one of the reasons why this deplorable condition exists in the Near East, concerning which M. Clemenceau feels some concern. These are the policies which we are invited to go to Europe and enforce.

Just a word with reference to the Versailles treaty. The conditions in Europe are indeed indescribable. The sufferings upon that continent are undoubtedly greater than have been endured by any people in the history of the world, not only in Russia but in Germany, Austria, Hungary, and throughout that region generally. The whole social and economic fabrics of Europe are imperiled. What the future has in store is a mere matter of speculation. It seems, however, that unless there is a change of policy that speculation will come suddenly to an actuality.

But why does that situation exist? There has been a practically unanimous judgment in regard to it. There is very little difference of opinion in regard to it among economists, publicists, and leaders who have studied the subject. They agree that the terms of the Versailles treaty are impossible, that they are destructive, and that they lead inevitably to the conclusion made by the Senator from Nebraska, and, as stated in practical effect by Mr. Nitti and other writers, that lying back of the question of reparation, and the terms of the policy, is the desire for the dismemberment of Germany. I can appreciate in some sense why that feeling may be entertained upon the part of the French people; but it must be clear that that can not take place, with the ruin which would follow, without dragging into the general ruin not only France but other countries of Europe and imperil the social fabric of the entire continent. Such a policy is so utterly destructive, so utterly impossible, that to even contemplate its enforcement seems to me almost unthinkable. That is the reason for the conditions which now prevail in Europe.

A great many distinguished Americans of all kinds of thought, all classes, you may say, have visited Europe within the last three years and have studied the situation, and while, of course, I can not be entirely accurate about it, I can not recall now anyone who has studied the conditions in Europe, and undertaken to arrive at a conclusion as to the cause of those conditions, who has not attributed them to the impossible terms of the Versailles treaty. There seems to be practically a unanimous agreement.

One of the latest expressions upon the subject was by a very distinguished banker in New York, who gave an interview after his return some time last August, in which he said:

> No more shortsighted and destructive settlement was ever inflicted upon the world, from the point of view alike of friend and foe, than the so-called peace treaties with Germany, Austria-Hungary, and Bulgaria.

Again he said:

> I have not met a man of liberal thought in Europe who does not denounce the treaties and look upon them as little short of a calamity.

Yet, so far as we can gather from the speech and the discussions of our visitor, what we are expected to do is to insure the enforcement of those destructive treaties.

Mr. President, it seems quite clear that, so long as they obtain, so long as the Versailles treaty is the fundamental law of Europe, just that long there will be misery, unrest, conflict, and bloodshed; and not only would the United States be justified in refusing to have any part in it, but in my humble opinion it is one of those things so far-reaching and so thoroughly involving the welfare of the whole human family that we are perfectly justified in discussing it in the most candid manner. Especially must such be true in view of our invitation to return to Europe.

It has been said by the Senator from Nebraska that M. Clemenceau is mild compared with the present prime minister of France and other leaders in France. That may be true; but the views of either with reference to the Versailles treaty are so destructive that comparisons are wholly unnecessary. It may be that in some respects they disagree, but they agree upon the Versailles treaty as it is. They agree upon its enforcement. They refused to consider any question of modification, and that means destruction. If Poincaré has something else in his mind, it is wholly immaterial, because the policy upon which the two do agree is quite sufficient for the indictment which may justly be brought against the policy of that country at this time.

I take the time here to read a paragraph from Nitti, ex-premier of Italy:

> The purport of France's action in the conference was not to insure safe military guaranties against Germany, but to destroy her; at any rate, to cut her up. And, indeed, when France had got all she wanted and Germany was helpless, she continued the same policy, even intensifying it.

Again he says:

> During the conference France put forward some proposals the aim of which was nothing less than to split up Germany.

I now read a paragraph from Mr. Bernard M. Baruch's volume on the making of the treaty. Mr. Baruch was one of the ablest of the advisers at the Peace Conference. He says:

> Americans and others had the charity to remember that the horrors of war were still heavy upon the world. Try as men might, and I submit that they did try, the spirit of vengeance or of selfish advantage could not be entirely eradicated from the minds of the framers of the treaty.

Mr. President, I read these paragraphs not to assess personal blame but to reveal the fact which must be apparent to all—that a treaty made in this spirit and with the views then entertained can not be a sound treaty or a treaty under which peoples may again come to a peaceful understanding. Such a treaty was indeed, as M. Clemenceau declares, but a perpetuation of the war, and it has brought with it all the evils, all the bitterness, all the demoralization of war.

Mr. President, to me the most discouraging feature of the able visitor's speech is the fact that here is one of the great and dominant figures of the world—perhaps there are not over three or four men in the whole civilized world now living who would rank with him in career and in fame, not only before his own people but before the people of the world—who comes to us to visit us four years after the signing of the armistice. He carries no message, when we analyze his speech, except that of punishment, of vengeance, of anticipated war. There is not a note of harmony toward the other powers of Europe, not a suggestion of a constructive policy, not a single ray of promise so far as actual peace and the happiness of the world is concerned.

I utterly disbelieve in his whole theory. I can not accept his outlook. I unhesitatingly reject the proposition that there is no means in this world by which to govern men except that of force.

If the great powers of Europe will write a treaty under which Europe can live, if they will do justice to the subject peoples of Europe, if they will abandon the principle of imperialism, if they will announce instead of a policy of force that of justice toward other peoples, if they will adopt the policy which looks to peace and not to war, which looks to reconstruction and not destruction, which looks to upbuilding and not dismemberment, and bring their program to the American people, they will find as sympathetic a chord here as they will find anywhere in the world.

We will not be misled, Mr. President, however, with the talk about peace to overlooking the underlying principles upon which the whole policy of Europe is based. It is precisely the same policy against which the delegates to Paris had to contend at the Peace Conference after the close of the war. There was carried to the Peace Conference an American policy, a policy based something upon justice and equity to the different nations of the world, something of amity, something of reconstruction. Every single principle that was carried to that conference by the American delegates was rejected, so far as the treaty proper is concerned. Not a single one of the policies was incorporated in the treaty. The same policies prevail now. We are invited back, not to a new Europe, not to a Europe looking to reconstruction. We are invited back to the old Europe with its secret treaties, its secret diplomacy, its militarism, its imperialism, and it is that policy which the American people are asked to furnish their money, their means, and their men to enforce. M. Clemenceau could have carried a message to the American people which they would have been delighted to hear, but he has brought the old policy. Humble as I am in these affairs, and as little as I have to say about them, I venture to declare that the American people will reject it. They will separate the policy from the man, and while giving the man a royal welcome they will with magnificent unanimity reject the policy.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, when this discussion was begun by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] I had not expected to say a word upon the subject, but I was led to think, while the discussion was going on, how easy it sometimes is for us to forget and how differently we feel at a distance of 3,000 miles from the cause of any friction between Germany and France than if we lived just across the river from an enemy country.

I very well recall the ardor with which after a long time we engaged in the war for the protection not only of our own rights but for liberty and humanity throughout the whole world. But before we got into the war France had been fighting our battles for us and for the rest of the civilized world as well.

I remember, Mr. President, seeing a cartoon of McCutcheon's in the Chicago Tribune at or about the time of the signing of the armistice. There were two pictures in the one cartoon. One represented what the Belgian soldier was going home to, while the other represented what the German soldier was going home to. The Belgian soldier found his cottage a mass of ruins. There was just one wall and a part of the chimney left standing. He had been looking among the débris, and there he found, as the only sad remainder of his family and his home, a child's doll upon which he seemed to be gazing with a sorrow unutterable. The picture would apply to the French as well as the Belgian soldier. Then there was the other picture of what the German soldier was going home to. It was a picture of a soldier clad in splendid uniform, with knapsack on his back, his rifle on his shoulder, and he was approaching a fine cottage all intact, with trees and flowers and a neat fence around it, and a wife and 3 or 4 apparently happy children rushing out to greet him. That was the picture of the German soldier and his home. I hope in the discussion of this question now or hereafter that we may for a little while anyhow put ourselves in the other fellow's place.

I remember, too, some of the statements of M. Briand at the Conference on the Limitation of Armaments. He contended against a reduction of land armament and forces—and why? He told us why. It was because Germany had not yet morally disarmed and that she had facilities through her military system that had been in vogue for many years prior to the armistice; she had facilities through the general officers of the army; she had the means and facilities through quasi military organizations all through Germany to mobilize a great army in a comparatively short time; and that as long as she was not morally disarmed there was yet danger of a war of aggression against France. For that reason M. Briand protested eloquently against the further reduction of their land military forces, agreeing, as they did at that time, to naval disarmament.

Now, Mr. President, I do not believe the speech of M. Clemenceau bears the interpretation put upon it by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] or the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. I think, in the first instance, M. Clemenceau wanted to know that America, true to her traditions and true to what she had done in the past, was still her friend as she was when France stood as the great bulwark of liberty in Europe. Here is what he said, expressing the same thought that M. Briand did in his memorable speech to the Conference on the Limitation of Armament:

> Do you know that they are manufacturing cannon by the hundreds; that they are making machinery everywhere?

Now, just a word here with reference to the present financial or economic condition of Germany—the reference to the making of machinery reminds me of it. Is it as bad, notwithstanding the tremendous depreciation of the German mark, as has been depicted from time to time here in the Senate? I doubt it very much. We read in the papers that Germany is not suffering from the lack of employment of her citizens, but that everybody in Germany is at work, a condition quite different from ours just a few months ago and a condition quite different from that in Great Britain at the present day, where there are thousands, if not millions, of unemployed. If they are at work they must be producing something, and if they are producing something they must be able to find in the markets of the world a market for the surplus products which they do produce.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator upon that point?

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator may be able to state how much Germany has made out of Americans on the sale of her marks in this country. The statement has been made that in the sale of her marks in this country she has been paid in gold by Americans more money than the entire amount of her payments or installments on her reparations would come to at this time.

Mr. STERLING. I do not know as to the figures in regard to that, but I am obliged to the Senator for the suggestion.

M. Clemenceau further said:

The German taxpayer pays, I think, $13—

I suppose he means the average per capita—

let's say $14, the French $43. There is a line in the treaty that says Germany will have to pay as high as the Allies and all the rest. And what are they preparing?

Further he said:

Now, I say, that after such a war men can not continue to fight each other; they can not fight forever. There are, after all, two Germanys. There is the Germany which is a democratic Germany, which I think could, more easily at least, be called to reason, while the others who love war have learned nothing and are preparing a revolution or civil war against their brothers just to begin the action against the European powers.

So, Senators, it is not against the German people that Clemenceau declaims. His dread is the militaristic forces in Germany that are even to-day seeking control of German affairs for the purpose of overthrowing the Republic and setting up an autocratic rule there. They little care if they bring about a civil war in Germany or precipitate a war in Europe to accomplish their purpose. Clemenceau says they are manufacturing cannon by the hundreds now.

It is rather to disabuse the mind of the idea that France is now seeking that we send an armed force to France to help defend her frontiers against German aggression that I call attention to another statement that Clemenceau makes. I do not think there is anything in the speech of Clemenceau that hints at such a thing.

Mr. BORAH. What does the Senator understand that Clemenceau means by guaranties?

Mr. STERLING. Not by an armed force. He perhaps would like to have a treaty such as was formulated and presented here to the Senate at one time between Great Britain, France, and the United States, in order that we might help guarantee France against aggression by Germany.

Mr. BORAH. That was clearly understood to be a treaty which was backed up by military force.

Mr. STERLING. Oh, in the end, of course it was.

Mr. BORAH. It is the end we are thinking about.

Mr. STERLING. But the Senator from Idaho, I think, as well as the Senator from Nebraska, sought to leave the impression that they wanted an armed force now and that that was the kind of guaranty we ought to give.

Mr. BORAH. What does Clemenceau want? He wants a treaty which is backed up by military force to enforce the German treaty. How are we going to do it?

Mr. STERLING. If necessary, we always back up treaties by military force, and if we should make a guaranty here we would be prepared to back it up by military force.

Mr. BORAH. Then, do I understand the Senator is in favor of a treaty to be backed up by military force?

Mr. STERLING. I am not declaring now that I am in favor of such a treaty.

Mr. BORAH. No; but what is the Senator's view in favor of such a treaty?

Mr. STERLING. I am not saying but that America might be justified in taking the part of France against aggressions by Germany.

Mr. BORAH. Is the Senator in favor of a treaty guaranteeing the territorial integrity of France?

Mr. STERLING. No; I am not in favor of such a treaty at the present time.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should like to inquire of the Senator from South Dakota if he accepts the statement of M. Clemenceau to the effect that Germany is manufacturing cannon by the hundreds?

Mr. STERLING. I am not saying that I accept that statement in its completeness, but I say it corroborates the declaration made by M. Briand at the Conference for the Limitation of Armament.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I observe that M. Clemenceau makes the statement; but it will be borne in mind that under the Versailles treaty a commission was appointed by the Allies, which was authorized to have inspectors in Germany, to make reports constantly to their respective governments concerning whether Germany does or does not comply with the treaty.

The last official information we had upon the subject from the War Department, which was submitted here in the Senate about a year ago, was to the effect that Germany was complying with the provisions of the treaty in respect to disarmament and the manufacture of further arms. Has the Senator from South Dakota any information at all to support the statement of M. Clemenceau?

Mr. STERLING. I have not any information on the subject; I have not examined the question. I remember, however, the provisions of the treaty to which the Senator from Montana calls attention. All I wish to say is that M. Clemenceau makes the statement, and I believe that he believed it when he made it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; but has the official inspector of any allied government made such a statement?

Mr. STERLING. Not that I know of, I will say to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. BORAH. In addition to that, Mr. Lloyd-George stated in the House of Commons, after his return from Genoa, that Germany had disarmed in accordance with the treaty.

Mr. STERLING. Further, M. Clemenceau says:

Now we are in the greatest crisis, and nobody knows when it may end. Nobody knows whether European miseries will not have some effect upon American prosperity. You announced to the world that you would set them free. You proclaimed it in the peace treaty. Then I turned to you and I told you this: Why did you make the war? Was it because you thought that you would be threatened? Was it to aid others? Was it for the liberation of suffering countries and make, as President Wilson said, democracy safe, or something like that?

And here is interjected—

[Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BORAH. Why does the Senator from South Dakota suppose that the audience laughed at that question.

Mr. STERLING. I know just as well as the Senator from Idaho knows why they laughed.

Mr. BORAH. They laughed because the gentleman who was speaking there was not in favor of democracy.

Mr. STERLING. Oh, no; I do not have that idea at all. I think they had an idea that the Versailles treaty had been a failure and that the ideals set up by the former President of the United States were not and could not have been realized. That is why they laughed, and not at all because Clemenceau was not in favor of democracy. M. Clemenceau continued:

Tell me which of these points you have gained by this war. You have come to the last point where you are granted by good fortune the time to think. Now, have you made up your minds?

Here is what I wish to call especial attention to. These are the very last words of his speech. M. Clemenceau says:

No sacrifice is demanded or exacted from you except to assert that you want to keep among the people of this world the great place that you have twice taken.

That is all. I do not believe that M. Clemenceau came here with the intention of stirring up a military spirit, Mr. President, but he wishes to be assured of the friendship of America; to be assured that for a like cause as that for which we fought before, or a cause akin to it, we shall be ready to fight again for the protection not only of our own rights but for liberty and humanity throughout the world. Those were the inspiring causes for our zeal and our ardor in taking part in the great World War.

Mr. President, I find here in the very same edition of the New York Times in which I find the speech from which I have quoted, and from which other Senators have quoted, an editorial which I believe gives a better estimate of M. Clemenceau and his relation to France and to this country, and also of the attitude of France toward this country, than has been given by the Senators who have spoken. I conclude by asking that this editorial may be read at the Secretary's desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection the Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

CLEMENCEAU'S PILGRIMAGE.

It was said of Alexander Hamilton by Talleyrand that he had "divined" Europe without seeing it. Georges Clemenceau has both seen America and lived in it; was in touch during the war with the flower of our youth and with our statesmen; so that he ought to be able to know us better than any living Frenchman. And he has already made it clear that in many ways he has accurately divined the United States. He must have foreseen the immense and overflowing personal tribute which would be paid him here. That, however, he puts aside as a mere incident of his visit. He could not have been in doubt that there would be a great emotional response by America to his splendid gesture of friendship. He understood Americans well enough to know that they would rise to greet a pilgrim who in his valiant old age came here to fling himself upon their affection and confidence. In all these respects his brightest anticipations must already have been far outstripped.

The great question was whether M. Clemenceau divined what Americans wanted to hear from him about his beloved France and her relations to this country. Here again his knowledge, his sagacity, his intuitions of the heart have been a sure guide to him. He came in no official character. He brought with him no thought of instructing America in her duty. His sole and sufficient mission was to stand up as a gallant and indomitable figure seeking truly to interpret to America the thoughts and feelings of his own people. If he could but communicate to us the emotions which filled his own breast, he felt sure that appropriate action could be left for Americans to decide upon for themselves.

In his first approaches to his self-appointed task in this country, M. Clemenceau has been most successful. Saying nothing of the overpowering ovation which he has received personally, and which he plainly regards as only secondary to his main object, his utterances have had in them a note of sincerity, of downright conviction, and of touching appeal—all quite irresistible. It is already certain that his visit will be an undoubted triumph. His alert wit, his unquenchable optimism, his confidence in American friendship, his undying devotion to the France for which he has lived and suffered and fought, make up a combination fitted to carry everything before it. At least in the person of Georges Clemenceau America is willing to pledge anew the sacred union of the years of war in and for France.

TRANSPORTATION RATES ON FARM PRODUCTS.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I wish to discuss briefly the question of transportation rates as they affect the producers of the West. I have here a letter from the chairman of the Public Utilities Commission of Kansas, setting forth in an interesting and illuminating manner the rather discouraging situation which now confronts the farmers and stockmen of Kansas, and giving in some detail facts as to transportation rates, showing beyond any question that they are out of line with the prices which the farmers are receiving at this time. I ask consent that the letter referred to, which is a very strong appeal for relief from the present distressing situation, be incorporated in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

STATE OF KANSAS,
PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION,
Topeka, September 9, 1922.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CAPPER: I know the attention that you have given to and your familiarity with the transportation question and your appreciation of the very great burden that the present level of rates lays upon industry. Beyond its weight upon the general public, the burden bears with peculiar force upon the agricultural industry and upon the people of the agricultural States. The products of the farm are bulky. The granary of the continent lies in the heart of the Nation requiring transportation of its foodstuffs long distances to the consuming markets.

Comment amounting to volumes has been made upon the effect of the present rates upon practically every line of business. These phases have been discussed in the public press, from the platform, in business meetings, before committees of Congress, and before the regulatory commissions to an extent that seems to make it unnecessary to add anything upon that phase of the subject here. It does seem imperative, however, to invite your attention to the general situation and the burden that the present high level of transportation rates has laid upon the country as a whole.

The increases in rates were made in 1918 and in 1920. Some adjustments have been made in the last year, but the general aspect has not changed. A brief statement of the general situation may be illuminative and interesting. All of the figures quoted here, after regarding railroad revenues and expenses, are taken from reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission and from the Bureau of Railway Economics.

The total revenues of the large railroads—that is, those having gross operating revenues amounting to $1,000,000 per annum—beginning in 1913 are as follows:

1913	$3,125,135,798
1914	3,047,019,908
1915	2,950,193,202
1916	3,472,641,941
1917	4,050,463,579
1918	4,926,504,000
1919	5,184,230,000
1920	6,225,417,245
1921	5,563,232,215

On the basis of current business, the 1922 revenues will not vary substantially from the figures for 1921.

In the eight years since 1913 the transportation cost to the country of handling freight, passenger, mail, and express has increased over $2,400,000,000. If this reflected a conspicuous increase in the amount of service rendered it would be justified. If, on the other hand, it represents an increase in cost for substantially the same service, then it is, indeed, a condition that calls for the most careful thought of the Nation. That consideration may be given to this phase of the question, there is shown for your information the amount of freight business transacted during these years reduced to terms of tons carried 1 mile. In other words, ton-miles moved. Side by side with the statement of tons carried 1 mile is shown the gross freight revenue.

	Revenue tons carried 1 mile.	Gross freight revenue.
1913	301,398,752,108	$2,198,930,565
1914	288,319,890,210	2,114,697,629
1915	276,830,302,723	2,037,925,560
1916	343,099,937,805	2,469,026,921
1917	394,465,400,493	2,834,119,707
1918	405,379,284,206	3,458,191,000
1919	364,025,244,000	3,556,734,000
1920	409,994,739,000	4,323,650,077
1921	306,755,332,000	3,918,699,970

From the above table it will be seen that where the ton-miles of revenue freight moved increased 1.8 per cent, the cost to the public of moving this volume of business increased 78.5 per cent.

These figures should convey some conception of the tremendous burden which business, and particularly the agricultural industry of the Nation, is carrying. Emphasizing the situation as to the freight business the following figures will illustrate the present burden laid upon the traveling public by the tremendous increase in the unit cost of passenger transportation.

From 1913 to 1921, inclusive, the passenger business of the country, reduced to terms of passengers carried 1 mile and the total amount collected for the service, is expressed below:

	Passengers carried 1 mile.	Gross passenger revenue.
1913	34,575,872,980	$695,987,817
1914	35,258,497,509	700,403,353
1915	32,384,247,563	646,475,045
1916	34,213,596,127	689,626,945
1917	39,476,858,549	827,216,574
1918	42,676,579,199	1,032,671,000
1919	46,192,112,000	1,178,120,000
1920	46,847,534,000	1,287,423,443
1921	37,329,114,000	1,153,752,002

Corresponding to the relation between the increase in freight revenues and freight traffic it will be seen that while the passenger traffic of the country was increasing 8 per cent, the passenger traffic cost to the traveling public increased 65.8 per cent.

One effect of this great increase in railroad transportation costs, both of passenger and freight traffic, has been to drive the short-haul traffic to the highways of the country through the use of motor vehicles. There has been a tendency in recent years to increase railroad freight rates for short hauls even beyond the proportion in which rates have been increased generally. The effect of this is reflected in the extended and expanding use of motor trucks for freight and passenger-carrying purposes. That motor trucks are an important factor to be considered in future transportation is beyond doubt, but it is my belief that excessive railroad rates for short hauls is accelerating the rate at which traffic is moving by that method.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics of the United States Department of Labor showed the value of index commodities for 1921 as follows, 1913 being used as the equivalent of 100 per cent (as I have done in the calculation of transportation costs):

Farm products	120
Food, etc	143
Cloths and clothing	183
Fuel and lighting	190
Metals and metal products	131
Building materials	196
Chemicals and drugs	168
House furnishings	238
Miscellaneous	158
All commodities	153

It will be seen that with all commodities at 153, and with heavy commodities like farm products, food, metal and metal products, considerably lower than that figure, that the transportation cost increases are entirely out of proportion. It must be further considered that these high transportation costs are a factor in the cost base of these index commodities.

In order to bring this illustration down to date and to give you a complete idea of the situation in which the grain farmers of the Nation, and particularly those of the Central West, find themselves, I am quoting here the average price of the three principal grains on the Kansas City and Chicago markets as of September 2, 1913, 1921, and 1922.

	1913	1921	1922	Per cent 1922 price is of—
				1913	1921
KANSAS CITY.
Wheat:
September	81⅛	116	93½	114.3	53.9

Corn:
September	74⅛	43½	52½	69.8	108.6
December	72	46⅝	50½	69.8	108.9
May	74	51⅛	54½	73.3	106.1
Oats:

December	44½	36½	33½	74.7	92.7

Wheat:
September	86⅞	126½	99	114.1	78.4
December	90½	128½	101½	112.0	78.7
May	95½	132½	106½	111.8	80.4
Corn:
September	74½	54½	59½	80.6	109.6

May	72	58½	59½	82.1	100.4
Oats:
September	41½	35⅝	32⅝	78.9	92.2
December	44½	38½	34	76.2	88.3
May	47½	42½	37⅜	78.1	88.5

Economic conditions are one factor in making freight rates. In other words, the value of the commodity transported is an element in determining the value of the transportation.

From preceding tables it will be observed the prices of wheat at the principal markets of Kansas City and Chicago is much below the price a year ago, although above the price of 1913. On the other hand, while the price of corn has improved slightly as against a year ago when it was abnormally low, it is materially below the price of 1913. The price of oats at both markets is below both the 1913 prices and the prices a year ago.

Industry of every character in which transportation costs are an important factor is staggering under a tremendous load. This applies with particular force in the agricultural industry. It is imperative that relief should be given to farmers from excessive freight costs.

Very truly yours,

C. M. REED.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, week after week during the present autumn the railroads of the United States have done, and still are doing, the greatest business in their history. They are doing it at an increase of 78½ per cent per ton-mile for freight, and of nearly 66 per cent per mile for passengers. During the earlier part of the year, we have it on the word of the Interstate Commerce Commission, that despite the handicap of two great strikes, the railroads have made a better financial showing for the first eight months of 1922 than for the same months of 1921.

For the moment, Mr. President, I ask you to compare these and other reports of business revival with the reported loss this season of more than half this country's fruit crop, because it cost the growers more money to ship their fruit than to let it rot. While thousands of bushels of good peaches were rotting, what housewives call "butter peaches" were selling at $2.65 a bushel in our towns and cities.

Since then it has been the grain belt's turn to suffer, and now both the grain grower and the stockmen are catching it. Much lower prices this crop year, three years of losses, and the higher-than-war rail rates are consuming our farmers.

It is strictly true to say that for the last two years and four months rail rates on farm stuffs have been more than the traffic could bear, or should have borne, and this was never more true than at this moment. Our farmers are actually paying out money for the privilege of growing wheat and that in a time of world need of wheat. For example, when wheat was at the $2 level a rate of 21 cents, say, on a bushel was only 10 per cent. But now with $1 wheat that same rate absorbs 20 per cent of the sale price. This is excessive; far too excessive. Farmers can not market wheat on the margin existing freight rates require.

The grower has no voice in the terminal market for wheat, which is 50 per cent and more below the war level. At the same time the cost of producing wheat is not more than 25 per cent under the war-time figure. In 1912 and 1913, before the war, country elevators averaged 5 cents a bushel margin. That was increased until in 1921 it reached 13 cents a bushel. Add to the high railroad rates high elevator charges and low terminal markets and the burden becomes destructive.

It is a most ruinous and short-sighted policy, for in the end the railroads and the eastern manufacturer and the public are all going to suffer for every dollar of loss inflicted on the farmer. That is the inescapable economic result. I argue not that the railroads can not afford to make substantial reduction in rates but that they can not afford not to make such reductions, and speedily.

Mr. President, throughout the Nation good news is crowding the bad. Despite strikes, despite that farmers are further being crucified between still lower prices for everything they sell—lower in some instances than pre-war prices—and higher prices for everything they must buy; despite the terrible injustice of these adverse and long-continued economic conditions from which our farmers suffer; despite the now unconscionable, indefensible, and exorbitant freight rates; despite all these things we seem to be promised an early period of recuperation, to be followed, if attained, by saner price adjustments, and at last genuine good times.

Will this come to pass? I think anyone may find the true answer, Mr. President, in a brief study of the facts.

Transportation is the barometer of commerce. Although the time for the seasonal decline to set in for railroad traffic is mid-October, more widespread stimulation of business is reported this autumn by the car service division of the American Railway Association than in 1920, the peak year for railway traffic.

During the week ending October 1 the roads loaded 1,003,759 cars with revenue-producing freight, or only 1½ per cent less than the greatest week's business they have ever done.

For the week ending October 28, 1,014,480 cars were loaded with revenue freight, an increase of 10,721 cars over the week of October 21 which preceded it, and the largest number loaded during any one week in the history of American railroads except the week of October 15, 1920, which exceeded this total by only two-fifths of 1 per cent.

A new record, however, was established. In the number of cars loaded with merchandise and miscellaneous freight, including manufactured products, the week ending October 28 of this year surpassed any other week in our railway history. Not simply that; this was the fifth week in almost five successive weeks this year that a new traffic record for this class of commodities was made. We again are witnesses, Mr. President, of the titanic struggle of our domestic commerce to come back and stay on its feet.

The Railway Age says we would break the railroads by reducing rates. It also is said in the same quarter that a reduction in rates would cripple the roads. I do not think so.

For more than a year, Mr. President, the roads have been doing a paying business in the face of two great strikes. Not a few are earning much more than their dividend requirements. According to the Dow Jones financial agency, first-class Wall Street authority, 13 great railway systems will increase their dividend rates during the next few months; one of them, the Chicago & North Western, to 8 per cent.

This year the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway is earning about 25 per cent on its preferred stock and 13 per cent on its common. Its surplus has increased from $35,000,000 to $105,000,000 during the last seven years. Last year, not so good a year for the railroads as this one, the operating expenses of the Santa Fe absorbed $80,000,000 of its earnings, it put $84,000,000 into improvements, and added $20,000,000 to its surplus.

This year the Union Pacific is earning 15 per cent and has a very large surplus, about $200,000,000.

This year the Burlington is paying its stockholders a 20 per cent dividend.

This year the Louisville & Nashville contemplates a 50 per cent stock dividend, and the Reading and the New York, Chicago & St. Louis are likely to declare extra dividends or special distributions.

Still later calculations this year, based on nine months of railroad earnings, and they are highly conservative calculations, indicate that the Great Northern will earn 6 per cent for its stockholders; the Pere Marquette, 8.4 per cent; the Chesapeake & Ohio and Southern Pacific, each, 10 per cent; the Illinois Central, 14 per cent. Stock in Reading has advanced to a new high mark for the year. Central of New Jersey expects to make an extra dividend or distribution. Pennsylvania increases its dividend from 4 to 6 per cent. Norfolk & Western declares an extra dividend at the rate of 4 per cent a year in addition to its regular 7 per cent a year dividend.

The Southern Pacific earned 9 per cent last year and will do still better this year. After paying its usual dividend of 20 per cent, the Lackawanna in 1921 paid a stock dividend of 100 per cent, and is now on a 12 per cent basis. The Lehigh Valley is paying 7 per cent dividends, and earning a good deal more.

The opinion held by the Railway Age is not shared by the stock market nor the "ticker" news. The discussion in regard to lower rail rates has been going on for more than a year, and some reductions have been made; yet in Wall Street railroad stocks have risen something like 50 per cent within 12 months. If you wish to own any Union Pacific stock you must pay a premium of from $40 to $50 a share to get it. In the same way, to own a share of Santa Fe stock will cost you anywhere from par to $106, and it is cheap at that. Shares in many other railroad stocks stand well up in the 90's.

These are signs, I take it, that these roads are not suffering from lack of business nor from lack of profits. We know that the valuation on which transportation charges are based is liberal. The former chief cost accountant of the United States Railroad Administration estimates that the value of all railroad property in the Interstate Commerce Commission's valuation report will not exceed $16,000,000,000. The present rail rates are based on a property investment of $18,000,000,000, or nearly $3,000,000,000 more.

During all this time of railway rehabilitation we have had the prolonged and critical slump in farm prices, while the prices of manufactured goods in a great many instances have remained close to war levels. The great spread between these two classes of products, both absolutely essential to the well-being of the people, is virtually no better adjusted than it was when we set out by the deflation policy to divide everything by 2 and make that division fair and equal.

One great reason why we are not now, two years later, on a more uniformly adjusted basis as to prices and values must be apparent. We can not have a genuine readjustment of prices and values when the cost of transportation and distribution is excessively high and the rating of all other things is at comparatively lower levels.

To paraphrase a historic saying, the way to readjustment is to readjust. The next great step in the process will have to be some substantial reduction of the higher-than-war rail rates.

Preceding and during this year or more of railway prosperity the public for nearly two years and a half has paid and still is paying a bonus of a billion dollars a year to the railroads in increased transportation charges, when for months neither the farmer nor general business in many localities has been making expenses, to say nothing of making profits.

Mr. President, I am the last man to wish to injure the railroads or to lessen their efficiency; but I see, as they do not seem to see, that we can have no economic balance, no actual readjustment, no true settling of business conditions while freight rates remain at the present peak and while farmers, who must pay freight both ways, continue to produce at a loss. Many of our farmers are being bankrupted by having to sell their products at virtually pre-war prices, then having to pay freight on them from 50 to 80 per cent higher than pre-war rates.

In other words, I contend that excessive and prohibitive freight rates will in the end more certainly prove disastrous to the railroads than certain immediate and safe reductions in rates which should be made.

Unless we are to change the whole industrial map of the United States, besides bringing ruin to many persons, my opinion is not that the railroads can not afford to make a reduction in rates but that they can not afford not to make reductions immediately.

It is an appalling but true statement that in an average good crop year, such as this has been, our farmers can not make ends meet; and I think we do not have to be told that a prosperity which does not reach the grass roots can not last. It can only be, and will be, short lived. Unless we can and will do something to put this country's biggest buyer and greatest wealth creator on its feet this new prosperity will prove as false and as delusive as "fox fire."

Except cotton, virtually all the great farm staples are not only still at uninflated prices but are deflated to points below cost of production. Corn is grown on nearly 5,000,000 of our six and one-half million farms. In many districts 80 per cent of the farmers grow wheat. Wheat is exceeded in acreage only by hay and corn. They supply "currency" to farmers. When the farmer takes his corn, wheat, hay, oats, or rye dollar to market he finds it worth about 60 cents, and, worse, competing with the middleman's and the manufacturer's 100 per cent dollar which is trying to be a superdollar. On top of this, the present rail rates on grain, grain products, hay, straw, and live stock are out of all reason.

Farmers who have survived the crushingly calamitous years of 1920 and 1921 are now entering on a third crop year of low prices, lower than the lowest, which, if amelioration is not speedily found, will put a decisive veto to any part of good times.

Wheat has always been considered by economists the regulator of prices. To-day it is probably the cheapest product in the United States—the one great world staple product which is still below the pre-war price. At the present buying power of the dollar, our farmers are only realizing between 55 and 60 cents a bushel actual money for this "price-regulating" food product. Europe will do little wheat buying, as a rule, until it is satisfied that the gamblers in the American wheat pit have "beared" the market down to the last notch.

So our farmers are double-crossed, first, by the lower values for what they have to sell and to ship; second, by the higher prices they must pay for everything they would buy. The farmer, hardest hit by deflation, working for less wages than anyone else, and getting the lowest returns, has steadily gone on producing, although he had far more excuse to strike than anybody ever had.

Secretary Wallace, of the Department of Agriculture, shows that the purchasing power of the farmer's products this year is from 25 to 45 per cent less than in 1913. That is an enormous difference. Add to this freight charges from 50 to 80 per cent higher than pre-war rates on his products, and you will have some conception of the farmer's present plight. It is appalling.

The farmer is about the only man in these United States who can not buy as much or more with his products in 1921 as he could nine years ago.

Although our farmers have had a good average crop year in 1922, they are unable to market their products for enough to maintain themselves. Many tell me of unpaid taxes on farm land. Some must see their farms sold for taxes. Many young farmers are tax-broke, and are being compelled to abandon their farms to seek work in the cities.

According to the census report, farm mortgages increased 132 per cent between 1910 and 1920; but since 1920 farmers' debts have increased tremendously, faster than ever before. The exceptions are those farmers who have abandoned their farms to their creditors to prevent increasing their debts far beyond the deflated value of their holdings.

Mr. President, the American farmer, the gamest fighter we have against adverse conditions, has almost reached his economic last ditch. He has fought a long-continued endurance contest that has been more drastic than any other economic crisis in our history.

This is true, notwithstanding the solid work this Congress has done and that Congress has yet to do to rehabilitate the farming industry; to organize it and put it on a fair basis with all other industries; to give it an entire new suit of credit and marketing clothes that shall be roomy enough and long enough to provide for its growth and to cover its nakedness.

The benefits to come from this legislation lie in the future. What the farmer needs now to help him survive, to help him pull himself out of the hole, is a material present benefit, such as a substantial reduction in freight rates would be. No one else is so terribly hampered by excessive freight charges as he. This is particularly true of the western farmer and stockman, far removed from the big markets. The rates now in force are in many cases almost prohibitive. Every bushel of Kansas wheat, for instance, shipped to Chicago this year is sold at an actual loss to the man who produced it. These high rail rates have hit all these men doubly hard, because the farmer gets the freight added to everything he buys and pays the freight on everything he sells.

Mr. President, better times can be made to reach the farm if only we will promptly extend a little practical, righteous help in season; if we will take the higher-than-war rates off of freight charges and come down to just plain war rates. If we do not do this, let me ask, what eventually will it profit the railways in dividends if we put the farmer completely, or almost completely, out of business?

It is true that in recent weeks the prices of farm products have turned to the upgrade and are more favorable than the figures given by Chairman Reed in this letter; but many of our farmers are still worse off financially than they were at the lowest ebb of the deflation period. The greatest thing that the Senate can do at this critical moment to assist them would be to take a stand for a prompt reduction in our still higher-than-war-time freight rates. For the roads it would be like casting bread upon the waters to share their growing abundance with their hard-driven best customer by lowering freight rates on his products. Throughout the Nation a prosperity based on a just level of transportation rates would be freely, immediately, and continually shared with the railroads.

If we are to save the situation—and this is no special plea; it vitally concerns the general welfare—let me say to you most solemnly and earnestly that the railroads must voluntarily and at once make further rate reductions; or, in default of such action, that the Interstate Commerce Commission must with utmost promptness put such rates into effect.

Mr. President, I hope to see the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate report favorably at an early date on my bill repealing section 15a of the transportation act—the rate-making clause. As it now stands, section 15a is fundamentally uneconomic and unsound. The first point of objection to the law felt by the western public concerns its requirement that the commission be required to make rates by groups which will give satisfactory earnings to all railroads in a given territory, whether these roads are badly located and badly equipped or whether they are properly located and kept in condition.

A second point is that the fair-return principles of the transportation act themselves should be modified to remove the influence on the Interstate Commerce Commission which now is holding back proper rate adjustments.

The clauses of the transportation act which provide for the return to the Government of these surplus earnings is nonenforcible as the law stands.

The passage of the bill now before the Senate committee will give the State railroad commissions more control over intrastate rates, which they should have. It would terminate many of the excessive charges by removing the so-called guaranty section of the Cummins-Esch Act, and so make possible the return of good times and a genuine revival of business in the only way in which they can come to stay. Those who are particularly interested in putting the farmer on his feet should at this session urge the passage of this bill or a similar measure repealing this and other objectionable provisions of the Cummins-Esch Act. Sooner or later, Mr. President, this must be done. Far better do it sooner, and so bring to an end the ruinous endurance contest which has brought our greatest prosperity maker—the farm—to the verge of ruin.

LIBERIAN LOAN.

The Senate as in Committee of the Whole resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 270) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a credit with the United States for the Government of Liberia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I think I ought to say, in regard to the amendment, that it was offered at the last session of Congress, and I suggested to the Senator at the time that he withdraw it, and that it should properly go on an appropriation bill. Afterwards an item similar to the one offered by the Senator was recommended by the Interstate Commerce Commission, approved by the Bureau of the Budget, placed on the last deficiency appropriation bill by the Committee on Appropriations, and voted on by the Senate. When it went to conference, however, the House conferees refused to agree to the amendment, and it was eliminated from the bill. At that time I told the Senator from Mississippi that if the amendment was not agreed to in conference, I, as one Senator, would not oppose it on this measure. I want to state to the Senate now, that so far as I am personally concerned, I shall not oppose the amendment but shall vote for it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ernst	McCumber	Shortridge	Willis
Fletcher	McKellar	Simmons
George	McKinley	Smoot
Glass	McNary	Spencer

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have no disposition to delay a vote upon the pending joint resolution, although I am very much opposed to the measure; but I think it will be well to place in the RECORD a statement of the essential facts with reference to this proposed loan to the Republic of Liberia. Some of these facts may have been placed in the RECORD in the discussions we had upon the subject during the last session, and it may be repetition to put them in again, but there are certain facts connected with it which I do not think have yet been incorporated in any of the speeches or documents which have found lodgment in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

I think there is some vagueness of thought with reference to the proposed loan by the United States, and I think a review of the circumstances connected with the matter will disclose that there is neither a legal obligation on the part of this Government to make this loan by reason of anything which has heretofore transpired, nor any moral obligation. If there is a moral obligation at all, it is very vague and uncertain, and to recognize it, under the circumstances, would set a precedent which would be exceedingly dangerous.

The only authority lodged in the executive branch of the Government with reference to extending credit or making loans to foreign governments, so far as I know, is that contained in the second Liberty loan act, which was approved April 24, 1917. That provision is as follows, and I read it because I want it to go in the RECORD:

> That for the purpose of more effectually providing for the national security and defense and prosecuting the war by establishing credits in the United States for foreign governments, the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, is hereby authorized, on behalf of the United States, to purchase, at par, from such foreign governments then engaged in war with the enemies of the United States, their obligations hereafter issued, bearing the same rate of interest and containing in their essentials the same terms and conditions as those of the United States issued under authority of this act; to enter into such arrangements as may be necessary or desirable for establishing such credits and for purchasing such obligations of foreign governments and for the subsequent payment thereof before maturity, but such arrangements shall provide that if any of the bonds of the United States issued and used for the purchase of such foreign obligations shall thereafter be converted into other bonds of the United States bearing a higher rate of interest than 3½ per cent per annum under the provisions of section 5 of this act, then and in that event the obligations of such foreign governments held by the United States shall be, by such foreign governments, converted in like manner and extent into obligations bearing the same rate of interest as the bonds of the United States issued under the provisions of section 5 of this act.

I will not read all of it. The part I omit relates only to the amount authorized by the act. Then comes the proviso:

> Provided, That the authority granted by this section to the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase bonds from foreign governments, as aforesaid, shall cease upon the termination of the war between the United States and the Imperial German Government.

Mr. President, under authority of that act, in October, 1918, the Secretary of the Treasury did what he designated as establishing a credit in favor of the Government of Liberia upon the books of the Treasury, but with the understanding that that credit should not be available until the Government of Liberia complied with certain specified terms and conditions.

Before that time, on September 24, 1917, Liberia had declared war against Germany, and became by virtue of that act entitled to ask and receive credit from the United States under the authority of the act which I have read. But Liberia never did, up to the time of the actual close of the war, which was in November, 1918, comply with the terms upon which she was to have the loan. Neither did she comply with those terms up to the time when the end of the war was technically declared, which I think was in July, 1921, when the President issued his proclamation, as provided in the act, declaring that the war with Germany was at an end. There is no pretense anywhere, so far as the record discloses, that Liberia in July, 1921, had complied with the terms and conditions upon which the loan was to be made when all pretense of war and war conditions had long since passed.

Subsequently to that time and during the month of October, 1921, Liberia through her representatives entered into an agreement with the Secretary of State providing for the loan. It is presumed that she had complied with all of the conditions and requirements of the original proposition. But, however that may be, Mr. President, the fact is that the new agreement, which the Secretary of State is now asking the Congress to carry out, was a cancellation, if indeed the failure of Liberia to comply before the termination of the war was not a cancellation. In legal effect at least it was a cancellation of the original understanding, and the legislation which we are now asked to enact is legislation based upon the new agreement made between the Republic of Liberia and the executive branch of our Government. There can be, in my opinion, no pretense that the United States was under any moral obligation by virtue of the fact that in 1918 a credit was extended to Liberia upon the books, to be made available upon the performance of certain conditions, which were never performed while the act under which the credit was extended was in operation. The agreement we are now asked to ratify is an agreement made after the authority under the act by which the proposed credit was to be extended had expired by limitation of law.

If the loan is to be made, it must be made and it must stand, not upon the understandings and the conditional agreements which were entered into by Secretary McAdoo at a time when he had the right and authority to make them, and which authority expired in July, 1921. It must rest not upon that act nor anything that transpired in connection with that proposed extension of credit, but must rest upon the agreement made by the Secretary of State and concurred in by the Secretary of the Treasury in October, 1921, after the act giving authority to extend loans to foreign governments had expired and at a time when admittedly there was no authority to extend the loan except with the affirmative approval of Congress.

It is because of those facts that Congress is now asked to pass the joint resolution. It is because it is recognized that there was no authority in law to make the agreement with the Republic of Liberia that we are now asked to enact the legislation.

Again, Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that the power of the Secretary of the Treasury under the second Liberty loan act to make the foreign loans and extend the credit was limited to purposes connected with the prosecution of the war. So that unless the money that is now proposed to be loaned is to be used for the discharge of some of the indebtedness which occurred in the prosecution of the war and in Liberia's participation in the war, there are two reasons why the loan can not rest, either upon legal or moral grounds, upon the agreement made or the understanding had by the Secretary of the Treasury in 1918. First, as I have said, because the power under that act expired before the conditions upon which the credit was to be extended were complied with, and, secondly, because I think it can be shown and appears in the record that the money was not borrowed for any purpose connected with the war.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator stated a moment ago, and correctly, I think, as I understand the situation, that the theory under which the loans were to be made—and it was undoubtedly the thing that Congress had in mind when it passed the act authorizing the making of them—was that the money should be used in carrying on the war against the common enemy. That being true, I wish to ask the Senator—and I am asking for information, because I have not been able to hear the debates which have thus far taken place—if at the time Liberia declared war against Germany there was not an understanding of some kind, either written or unwritten, that the United States would loan her this money if she would declare war against Germany? In other words, did not the Liberian Government have a tacit understanding with the American Government that if Liberia would declare war against Germany we would loan her this money?

Mr. SIMMONS. I answer the Senator unhesitatingly in the negative. There was no such understanding so far as the record discloses. Liberia declared war in September, 1917. The proposed credit extension was in October, 1918, more than a year afterwards.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that it is not disclosed upon the face of the record, but I was wondering why Liberia declared war against Germany unless she did have such an understanding.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think I can enlighten the Senator. I believe it is a fact that the United States, through the President, did suggest to Liberia that it would be in her interest, as well as in the interest of the opponents of the Central Powers, if she would declare war against Germany, and for a reason which addressed itself more particularly to the advantage to be derived by Liberia than to any advantage accruing to the Allies. The Allies were not particularly interested in Liberia declaring war. She is a little Republic. There are few more than 2,000,000 people there, and less than 60,000 of them are civilized. But the Government of the United States has always manifested a sympathetic interest in Liberia. It is a Republic which had its origin in the immigration of American negroes to that country. The United States was interested in that country. Great Britain controlled the seas. Great Britain in 1917 was placing her interdict upon the commerce of nearly every country in the world. She was interfering with our commerce. She was interfering with Germany's commerce with Liberia, and Liberia's trade relations with Germany at that time were very close. By reason of this action on the part of the British Government Liberia was unable to continue those trade relations with Germany. Having been cut off from her main source of traffic and international trade, Liberia was rapidly getting into a state of great economic disorder and distress, and the United States, for the purpose of advancing her interests, and because of sympathy with that Republic, suggested to her that she declare war against Germany and thereby make it possible for an interrupted intercourse with other countries to continue.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, as I understand, the suggestion really came from former President Wilson, and was made for the purpose of helping Liberia rather than of obtaining any material assistance for the Allies in the World War?

Mr. SIMMONS. It was a great help to Liberia.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. So, in order to get the money——

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will permit me first to finish with the Senator from North Carolina——

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Liberia declared war; and then the United States Government did not give her the money. I suppose, having declared war and gone to the expense that is incident to war and having her army and navy into the war in order to help us win it——

Mr. SIMMONS. Liberia did not have any army.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator think it is quite right now, when Liberia probably needs the money in order to pay pensions to her soldiers and their widows, that we should refuse to carry out an agreement which we ourselves had suggested?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Senator's humor is delightful. Liberia undoubtedly had a great army and a great navy, and undoubtedly a great many of her soldiers participated in the war in Europe, or, at least, the Senator's argument is based upon that theory. As a matter of fact, Mr. President, Liberia took no part, and was not in a condition to take any part, in the World War. Her declaration of war against Germany merely relieved an embarrassing international situation.

Mr. NORRIS. If it be true that Liberia did not take any part in the war, was it not really a perversion of the act of Congress for a President of the United States to suggest to a country that, for her own benefit, when she, in reality, could not help any in the war, she should declare war and thus get some of our money?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not think there is anything to sustain the idea that we promised to give Liberia money if she would declare war; I have never before heard that suggestion; but after Liberia did declare war, a year after—it is true that Secretary McAdoo did; why he did it I do not know; I am not here for the purpose of arguing that, because I think it is irrelevant to the issue now before us—Secretary McAdoo did agree, under certain conditions, to extend Liberia certain credits. Those conditions were never complied with; the act under which the Secretary made the agreement or contract, if it may be so called, expired, and authority to make the contract fell with it. Then the present Secretary of State took up the matter and entered into a new agreement with Liberia, recognizing that he had no authority to do it, and he is now asking Congress to give him authority to do it.

As I said before, the question, then, is, Shall we give this authority; and if so, why shall we give it? If the obligations to discharge which she desires to use the money were obligations incurred by her during the World War on account of any assistance she rendered or attempted to render to the Allies in the prosecution of the war, there might be some reason why we should take the course which is now recommended by the Secretary of State and help this little Republic to relieve herself of the burdens assumed in the interest of the Allies in that great struggle; but, Mr. President, an examination of the record shows that this money is not to be lent and is not to be used for any such purpose.

I wish to inform the Senate exactly the purpose for which this money is to be used. It is actually proposed to create a commission to be composed of a number of high-salaried officials, with all the retainers, experts, clerks, and accountants, probably, which are incident to such commissions which we put in charge of the financial affairs of weaker governments, as in the case of Haiti, because we do not think they are able to administer them fairly and justly and equitably themselves. Nobody knows what that commission will cost, but this proposed act provides for a commission to supervise the expenditure of this money and to collect the interest upon it, I assume, by controlling the customhouse and probably collecting or supervising the collection of local taxes, as in the case of Haiti. Here are the purposes for which this money is to be expended. The statement which I shall now quote will be found on page 125 of the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee of the other House, and shows how the larger part of the $5,000,000 is to be used:

> 3. Two hundred and thirty-three thousand dollars, or such less amount as shall be sufficient to enable the Government of Liberia to pay its internal funded debt, and the interest due thereon.
> 4. Three hundred and fifty thousand dollars, or such less amount as shall be sufficient to enable the Government of Liberia to pay its internal floating debt.
>
> 5. One million six hundred and fifty thousand dollars, or such less amount as may be necessary for the purpose of enabling the Government of Liberia to purchase or redeem all of its bonds now issued and outstanding, representing the 5 per cent sinking fund gold loan, due July 1, 1952, under the agreement for refunding loan dated March 7, 1912, between the Republic of Liberia, of the first part, and J. P. Morgan & Co., Kuhn, Loeb & Co., the National City Bank of New York, and First National Bank of New York, acting for themselves and for Robert Fleming & Co., Banque de Paris et des Pays Bas, M. M. Warburg & Co., and such payments of interests, costs of notices, and other payments or deposits, as well as payments which may be due from the Government of Liberia, under the fiscal agency agreement dated March 7, 1912, between the Republic of Liberia, of the first part, and the National City Bank of New York, of the second part, as shall be necessary to terminate all obligations of the Government of Liberia under all of said bonds or under the agreement for refunding loan or the fiscal agency agreement above mentioned, as shall entitle the Government of Liberia, in accordance with the terms of said agreement, to the cancellation and destruction of all said bonds held by the fiscal agents in the sinking fund mentioned in said agreements. Advances for this purpose shall be made at such times and in such amounts as shall be determined by the Secretary of State of the United States. It is understood that the Secretary of State of the United States may determine the best method for acquiring part or all of the aforesaid bonds, but in no event shall more than par and accrued interest be paid therefor.
> 6. Such amounts as may be necessary to enable the Government of Liberia to make improvements in transportation and communication facilities, sanitation, and other public works, in accordance with plans which shall have received the approval of the financial commission.

Mr. NORRIS. From what is the Senator from North Carolina reading?

Mr. SIMMONS. I am reading excerpts from the report of the hearings of the Ways and Means Committee of the House.

Mr. NORRIS. But the very nature of the testimony which the Senator is reading shows that it is taken from some agreement.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; I am reading excerpts from the agreement of October 28, 1921.

Mr. NORRIS. That is an agreement between our Government and Liberia?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes, sir; that is the agreement I am talking about; the agreement entered into by Secretary Hughes.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the agreement which provides how the money shall be used?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; that is the agreement which Secretary Hughes has made with the Liberian Government, and this loan is to be made, according to this agreement, for the purpose of paying these old debts of Liberia, practically all of them antedating the World War. All of the debts due to big New York bankers and corporations run back as far as 1912.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I was going to state for the record, in answer to the Senator from Nebraska, that the quotation which the Senator from North Carolina has read is from a copy of the "Financial plan and depositary agreement signed by the Secretary of State and the Liberian Plenary Commission on October 28, 1921."

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; I stated that. What I read were simply excerpts from that agreement, incorporated in the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. OWEN. Was the agreement made in 1921?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. On October 28, 1921, the agreement was made by the Secretary of State and representatives of the Liberian Government, which agreement was not to become effective until action by Congress by resolution or bill.

Mr. OWEN. So that the agreement was entered into three years after the war.

Mr. SIMMONS. Three years after the war actually closed, and several months after the President of the United States declared by a proclamation that the war with Germany was at an end. So there can not be any contention that this agreement has any authority under the second Liberty loan act or any other war measure.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Caroline yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand the Senator to claim that there was not a moral obligation to advance this money carried over from the former administration, and that Secretary Hughes honored that moral obligation?

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator was not here when I was discussing that phase of the question.

Mr. SMOOT. No. I ask the question because of the question asked by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. The fact of the case is that there was a moral obligation.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have already gone over that, and I dislike very much to have to go over it again, but I will do so if it is desired. There was no moral obligation.

Mr. SMOOT. I will not ask the Senator to do so.

Mr. SIMMONS. I stated that in my judgment there was no moral obligation, as there clearly is no legal obligation, on the part of the United States to lend this money. There was an agreement undoubtedly made during the war by Secretary McAdoo that he would extend—that is as far as it went—to the Republic of Liberia a certain credit whenever that Government complied with certain terms and conditions. That agreement was made in 1918; and in 1921, when the President declared by proclamation that the war was ended, Liberia had not complied with those terms. There was no pretense that she had complied with those terms; and the war which the loan was to be made to aid, as the country understood and as I have no doubt Secretary McAdoo understood, had ended. If Liberia needed it for the purpose of helping in the prosecution of the war—and the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the face of the act conferring authority, had no power to grant credit unless it was for the purpose of helping in the prosecution of the war—what moral claim can she lay to it when she waits to comply with the conditions until after the war has been fought out and won and declared finally at an end?

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. But she was in the war all the time, the Senator must remember, and helped to win it. We probably would not have won it if she had not come in. The Senator ought not to forget that.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, does the Senator from North Carolina yield to me?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to remind the Senator from North Carolina that at that time the then Secretary of the Treasury, now the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], expressly stated to the Department of State that there was no moral obligation. I think that is in the record, and I think the Senator from Virginia stated that on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is right. I was going to read that statement. That statement was made, as I understand, in connection with a letter written to the then Secretary of the Treasury, now the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], by Mr. Lansing. The Senator from Virginia said—and I quote from his speech made in this Chamber discussing this very question—speaking of Secretary Lansing's statement:

> Mr. President, it is that statement of the Secretary of State which I desire to repeat I did not accept. I totally dissented from that view.
>
> The Secretary had expressed the opinion that there was a moral obligation.
>
> Not only that, but I thought the $26,000 which had already been advanced to Liberia was the only item in all of the credits established by this Government that could not be justified.
>
> Mr. President, I do not know what information was before Secretary McAdoo when he agreed to extend this credit, but I know this: Secretary McAdoo is a great lawyer. I know that Secretary McAdoo was entirely familiar with the act from which he derived his power, and I know that Secretary McAdoo in all probability would not have agreed to extend that credit to Liberia except upon the understanding that it was to be used by her in connection with the prosecution of the war, because that was the limitation upon his power; and I know the further fact, Mr. President, that notwithstanding this money was there, ready to be lent by the Secretary when Liberia complied with the ordinary conditions which were exacted of her and other foreign Governments seeking loans, she let the matter rest until the war had ended and until another administration had come into power and formal peace had been declared; and then she comes here and asks for the money, not for the purpose of aiding in the prosecution of the war, not for a purpose in which the United States has an interest, but for the purpose of paying her old debts, contracted in 1912, in favor of J. P. Morgan & Co. of New York, Kuhn, Loeb & Co. of New York, M. M. Warburg & Co. of New York, and the National City Bank of New York. This resolution would better be entitled, Mr. President, "a joint resolution to pay a bad debt of an insolvent debtor of J. P. Morgan and Kuhn, Loeb & Co.," rather than to relieve the downtrodden and distressed Republic of Liberia.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the facts would justify an amendment to the Senator's proposed title to this joint resolution, in addition to what he has said, and this is, to create additional jobs for a number of those who want them.

Mr. SIMMONS. Oh, yes; there are jobs aplenty in this proposition. Of course, when we went down here into Haiti——

Mr. McKELLAR. There are more, I think, in this measure than have been provided for in any other measure of like kind in recent years.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, we need the jobs, all right, Mr. President. That ought to be offered as another argument in favor of it. There are lots of fellows who are going to need jobs.

Mr. SIMMONS. I concede that. I concede that Republicans are at all times in need of Federal jobs.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and occasionally a Democrat.

Mr. SIMMONS. But just at this particular time, when the Republican Party has a superabundance of lame ducks on its hands, it is most particularly and especially appropriate to make places for them.

Mr. NORRIS. Is not that a good reason for making places and having some more jobs available?

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is exactly right, as he generally is.

The loan agreement provides that a commission of American citizens at high salaries shall go to Liberia and act as fiscal agents. How many retainers and employees this commission will have to have nobody can tell. During the war Liberia had apparently abandoned all of this scheme. She let it lie dormant while the war was going on, and for three long years did not make a move to get this money, although it was there awaiting her. As long as the old administration remained in power there was not an effort to get this money. Now, however, she comes here and asks for it; and when it becomes necessary for her to lay her cards upon the table and show what she wants with it—the war meantime having expired and Liberia not having pressed her claim for the money while the war was going on—when she is asked to say what she is going to do with the money, she says, "I want it to enable me to pay debts which I owe these New York bankers and which were contracted in 1912."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator has said that this measure will provide a whole lot of jobs for lame ducks, and yet he seems to criticize Liberia for not crowding her claim and getting her money while the Democrats were still in power.

Mr. SIMMONS. We did not have any lame ducks when we were in power.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; you had a whole lot of them just after you went out of power.

Mr. SIMMONS. That was after we went out; not while we were in.

Mr. NORRIS. If you were not shrewd enough to get these jobs for your lame ducks, you ought not to complain now because we are going to get them for our lame ducks.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no doubt that you are going to get them. You have an immense mass of legislation pending here right now to make jobs for your lame ducks.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, we need it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I know you do. I appreciate your situation. I have profound sympathy with you, and I should like to help you all I can; but I do not think you ought to ask a distressed and overtaxed people to furnish the money with which to give employment to your lame ducks.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me the Senator is really feeling badly because it was not gotten in time. He seems to complain that Liberia did not get this money of Democrats, and is now going to get it of Republicans. You missed your opportunity. We picked it up. Your lame ducks had to go without jobs, and we are going to do better with ours.

Mr. SIMMONS. During the Democratic administration the tide of prosperity in this country ran so high that it was difficult to get a man to take a Federal job. The men were making so much money, every man was so busy carrying on his business enterprises, the tide of prosperity was so high, that nobody wanted these offices. Lame ducks could just step right down the street and get employment at a better salary than the Federal Government was paying. The Federal Government was not paying one-fourth as much as some business enterprises in this country were paying for the same talent.

Mr. NORRIS. In other words, the country was full of profiteers, and they did not need jobs.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; we had profiteers, as we have profiteers now. Good times will make profiteers. Bad times generally dispense with profiteers to a certain extent, and that is the reason why you passed your tariff bill—in order to give the profiteers another opportunity.

Mr. NORRIS. The profiteers were getting hard up. Since the Democrats went out of power they had lost their occupation, and it took a tariff bill to give it back to them.

Mr. SIMMONS. I give it up, Mr. President.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I think it only fair to state to the Senate—I think the Senator from North Carolina wanted to be fair, but he has forgotten—that it is admitted on all sides, in the departments at least, that Liberia entered the war at the request of the United States, Great Britain, and France. At the time she entered the war 85 per cent of her business was being done by the Germans. They virtually had control of the islands, and they had control of the wireless station. They were controlling some of the exports which the British Government and the other allies needed; and the three powers wanted Liberia to go into the war to help them, or, rather, not to be of any assistance to Germany by reason of the use of the wireless station and the cutting off of Great Britain from the use of some of the products of the country.

Liberia declared war against Germany in August, 1917. In January, 1918, this loan was asked for. In July it was recommended by the Secretary of State and approved by the President, and Liberia was notified that she had been given credit to the extent of $5,000,000. France was notified that the credit had been established. Great Britain was notified that the credit had been established.

It is true that with the proposition notifying the Liberian Government there were submitted certain conditions upon which this loan was to be made. Those conditions were unsatisfactory; but we are told by the department that they continued to ask for changes in those conditions and to ask for the advancement of the money. That is stated in letters from the department.

I am not going all over this matter again, because I covered it fully before; but Secretary Lansing says there is a moral obligation to make the loan. Secretary Hughes, when this matter was presented to the committee of the House, stated that there was a moral obligation to make the loan. The bill has passed the House and is here with a favorable report from the committee, the committee believing that there was a moral obligation on the part of the Government to carry out the agreement made during President Wilson's administration, and it is on that question we are asking for a vote. I am not going to take any further time.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am opposed to the pending joint resolution and expect to vote against it. I do not think there is the slightest moral obligation on the part of the United States to make this loan. It is admitted that there is not the slightest legal obligation on the part of the United States to make the loan. Under the terms upon which it is going to be made, if made, it will not do the people of Liberia any good. Why? There has been an agreement made by the State Department with Liberia concerning the disposition of the money. We are to lend them $5,000,000. This agreement will give Liberia little money. I want to read what is to become of two million of it:

> (b) A new arrangement for that purpose shall be made between the Government of Liberia and the Government of the United States.
> 3. Two hundred and thirty-three thousand dollars, or such less amount as shall be sufficient to enable the Government of Liberia to pay its internal funded debt and the interest due thereon.
>
> 4. Three hundred and fifty thousand dollars, or such less amount as shall be sufficient to enable the Government of Liberia to pay its internal floating debt.
> 5. One million six hundred and fifty thousand dollars, or such less amount as may be necessary for the purpose of enabling the Government of Liberia to purchase or redeem all of its bonds now issued and outstanding representing the 5 per cent sinking-fund gold loan, due July 1, 1952, under the agreement for refunding loan dated March 7, 1912, between the Republic of Liberia, of the first part, and J. P. Morgan & Co.; Kuhn, Loeb & Co.; the National City Bank of New York; and First National Bank of New York, acting for themselves and for Robert Fleming & Co., Banque de Paris et des Pays Bas; M. M. Warburg & Co.; and Hope & Co., and for others, of the second part, including such payments of interest, costs of notices, and other payments or deposits, as well as payments which may be due from the Government of Liberia under the fiscal agency agreement dated March 7, 1912, between the Republic of Liberia, of the first part, and the National City Bank of New York, of the second part, as shall be necessary to terminate all obligations of the Government of Liberia under all of said bonds or under the agreements for refunding loan or the fiscal agency agreement above mentioned, as shall entitle the Government of Liberia in accordance with the terms of said agreement to the cancellation and destruction of all said bonds held by the fiscal agents in the sinking fund mentioned in said agreement. Advances for this purpose shall be made at such times and in such amounts as shall be determined by the Secretary of State of the United States. It is understood that the Secretary of State of the United States may determine the best method for acquiring part or all of the aforesaid bonds, but in no event shall more than par and accrued interest be paid therefor.

Evidently nearly $2,000,000 of this money is to be used in taking up bonds and other obligations which apparently, according to this agreement, have been acquired in some way by certain banking firms in New York. In other words, these gentlemen in New York have made an investment in Liberia and the United States is going to make that investment good. That is the real purpose of this bill. It comes here after the war. It is presented here under the excuse that we owe a moral obligation to Liberia for her aid to us in helping win the World War. It is ridiculous to talk about Liberia helping the United States to win the World War, and our having a moral obligation to lend them this money on account thereof. We call it lending, but what is really meant is to give to the people of Liberia, or to the Government of Liberia, this $5,000,000 for such purposes.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, neither the Senator from Tennessee nor the Senator from North Carolina has given us any information as to who is the owner of the two first amounts the Senator read. Can the Senator give us any information in regard to that?

Mr. McKELLAR. I can not. I sent to the House for the hearings, and I was informed that they had been destroyed. That was the report I received. I do not understand why these hearings were destroyed. It is possible there may be some of the hearings in the possession of other Senators, but I have been unable to get a copy of the hearings, and I am reading from the hearings as quoted in the RECORD some time ago.

I do not think it is obligatory upon the United States to make good these loans of these various banking firms in New York City. I do not think we have a right to. There is much talk about moral right. We have no moral right to dispose of the people's money in any such way. I owe debts, and other Senators owe debts, I have no doubt, which we would be very glad indeed to have the United States Government pay for us. Some of us have had debts due to us, and we would be very glad to have the Government lend our debtors the amounts of money so that they could pay us. But we all know that the people's money should not be used for such a purpose. That is what we are asked to do by this bill. Do not let us fool ourselves for a moment. That is precisely what we are asked to do with $2,000,000 of the people's money. We are to make good to these firms in New York who may have bought these bonds. We do not know what they paid for them. We do not know whether they paid 10 cents on the dollar, or 20 cents on the dollar, or 50 cents on the dollar for them. I can only say that if they paid over 10 cents on the dollar for them they were very poor business men, because the revenues of Liberia do not warrant the paying of any more than that for Liberian bonds.

What becomes of the other three million? I doubt very much whether it goes to the people of Liberia. If the people of Liberia get any money under the so-called moral agreement we will have to appropriate sums in the future for them. It can not come out of this appropriation.

Let us see to whom it is to go.

The Government of Liberia further engages—

That is, engages with our Government under this proposed agreement—

1. That, for the purpose of securing the United States loan, the control during the life of the United States loan of the collection—

During the life of it. I do not recall how long this loan is made for. We will see about that in just a moment. It does not say. There is no time given for paying it back. They do not expect it to be paid back. There is not a man who votes for it who expects this loan will ever be paid back. It is substantially and effectively nothing more than a gift. We all know it is a gift.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the Senator is not warranted in making that statement. I do not think there is a man who is going to vote for the measure who does not believe the money will be paid back. There is no one who does not know that there is sufficient property in Liberia to pay it back. When the Senator says there are no revenues in Liberia to justify this loan he forgets that when the agreement was made the revenues of Liberia amounted to nearly $500,000, and they dropped off during the war period to $200,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. The hearings as quoted here do not bear out the statement of my distinguished friend.

Mr. CURTIS. I have the official figures, if the Senator wants them put in the RECORD.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will put them in the RECORD. I call the attention of the Senator to the joint resolution itself. It provides that the Secretary of the Treasury "is hereby authorized to purchase from that Government its obligations hereafter issued, bearing such rate or rates of interest, maturing at such date or dates, and containing such terms and conditions as the Secretary may from time to time determine."

What are we buying? These bonds can bear 1 per cent or they can bear no interest at all. Any disposition can be made of them, and we all know that it is a gift, absolutely a gift, two million of it going to these bankers in New York, who would no doubt like to have the money on the bonds they have invested in heretofore; the remainder of it not going to the people of Liberia, but I now call attention to those to whom it will go:

That, for the purpose of securing the United States loan, the control during the life of the United States loan—

During the life of the loan; and the loan is virtually made perpetual. We are establishing offices here which will remain long after all of us are dead and gone, and then other generations which have come will go, and these offices and these payments and these officials will still go on. I repeat:

The Government of Liberia further engages:

1. That, for the purpose of securing the United States loan, the control during the life of the United States loan of the collection, application, and administration of all the assigned revenues and receipts in accordance with the present plan shall be vested in the financial commission, the administration of which shall be under the direction and control of the financial commissioner or, during his absence, of the next ranking member of the financial commission. The financial commission shall be composed of a financial commissioner, at a salary of $15,000 per annum; a deputy financial commissioner, at $10,000 per annum; an auditor, at $6,000 per annum; three administrative assistants of class 1, at $6,000 per annum, to be assigned, respectively, as controller general of customs, commissioner general of the interior, and director general of sanitation; 10 administrative assistants of class 2, at $4,000 per annum, to be assigned, respectively, as follows: Three comptrollers of customs, three district commissioners, two technical advisers (roads and ports), an accountant, and an agricultural adviser; and two administrative assistants of class 3, at $3,000 per annum, to be assigned, respectively, as follows: One postal-revenue officer and one clerk assistant. All members of the financial commission shall be designated by the President of the United States, to serve during his pleasure, and shall be appointed by the President of Liberia. The administrative assistants shall be under the direction and supervision of the financial commission, which shall be organized and function according to methods of procedure to be approved by the Secretary of State of the United States.

The financial commissioner, the deputy financial commissioner, and such other members of the financial commission as may be charged with the collection, application, or administration of moneys under the provisions of the present plan shall give adequate bond. All premiums on bonds executed by the aforesaid officials shall be considered a part of the expenses of the financial commission.

Mr. SIMMONS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does not the Senator believe that an official force of the size indicated by what he has read from the RECORD would cost the Government every year something like a third or a half of the total amount of this loan?

Mr. McKELLAR. With this tremendous corps of assistants and officers, the people of Liberia will never get any advantage out of this loan at all, and I doubt if they will be able to tax themselves enough to pay the deficit in salaries, if they have to pay the deficit, to our own appointees. I do not know what the facts are about that.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, with the Senator's permission, I would like to put the exact figures as to the revenues into the RECORD.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will, because I was just coming to that.

Mr. CURTIS. In 1913 the revenues were $485,639. They dropped in 1917, during the war, to $163,000. They went back in 1920 to $346,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. In 1920 and 1921 they amounted to $163,000. That would not anything like pay the interest. It would not pay the interest on what we turn over to them. That would not pay the interest on the salaries we are going to pay our own officers for looking after it.

If we pass the pending joint resolution we will make ourselves the legislative laughingstock of all the legislative bodies of the world and pay out the money of the already overburdened taxpayers for a purpose for which we have no moral right to appropriate it. It is a measure which should not receive a single vote in this body. There is not the sign of a legal obligation on us to make the loan.

There is not a sign of a moral obligation upon us to make the loan and it is being done only for the powerful interests in New York which are demanding that they be given this opportunity to filch from the Public Treasury the amount that Liberia owes to them, and the purpose also of the resolution is to give jobs to a lot of needy men, no doubt. I have no doubt the men need the jobs, and if we are in the business of creating jobs for the benefit of the favored few, let us go on and pass the measure, but I think we will be called to account by the American people for this great and unauthorized and indefensible waste of the people's money for any such purpose.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. Have we had a very happy experience in collecting what we loaned to other governments? Should our experience in those instances encourage us to lend to the Government of Liberia?

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is exactly right. I have heard distinguished Senators on this floor say that they were utterly opposed to the collection even of the interest on the war debts from such nations as Great Britain, France, and Italy. What will those Senators say when it comes to collecting this debt from the poor people of Liberia? By the way, it can not be urged here that the measure is for the benefit of the people of Liberia, because it is not. The people of Liberia are not going to get anything out of it. The only people who will get anything out of the appropriation made under the pending measure are the financial interests in New York, who want to recoup their bad debts by having the United States pay them, and the officeholders whom we are going to appoint under the provisions of the joint resolution. Is there any doubt about it? There is not a Senator on the floor on either side of the Chamber who has any doubt about that fact. We all know it. It is unjustifiable and we ought not for a moment to think of passing the measure, and I hope that it will not pass. I intend to vote against it.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, disregarding the statute authorizing foreign loans, I would not feel so certain of the absence of any moral obligation to Liberia. I think, had Liberia contracted debts for the purpose of prosecuting the war after notice had been given that the credit of $5,000,000 had been made, the claim of a moral obligation might be made with more justification. But this Liberia had not done.

Mr. GLASS and Mr. McKELLAR addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I will yield in just a moment. I do not understand that Liberia asks for the money now or expects it to be loaned to meet any debts whatever incurred by Liberia in assisting in the prosecution of the war. I yield now to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. I merely desire to say that I could wish that Senators would speak more accurately about this matter.

When they undertake to state that a credit was established, I contest the statement. A conditional credit was established, and the conditions never have been complied with to this day. There is not an item in the account rendered that relates itself to the prosecution of the war or to the security of this Government in the war. Then how can there be any moral obligation?

If the Senator will pardon me further a moment, the present Secretary of State clearly recognized that fact in his letter to the former chairman of the Finance Committee, Mr. Penrose, when he said:

In view of the time which has elapsed since the establishment of the credit, the question which well might be raised as to the propriety at this time of advancing the money to Liberia as a war measure,

If there is anything in the statute that would authorize the advancement of the money by this Government to Liberia except for war purposes, I would be obliged if some Senator would point it out.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator from Virginia advise us as to the date of the letter of the Secretary of State from which he has just read?

Mr. GLASS. It was written June 22, 1921. The whole basis of the proposed conditional credit must relate itself to the statute authorizing the credit, and the statute authorizes a credit only for war purposes, only for the prosecution of the war. Yet here we have a joint resolution that has nothing on earth to do with the prosecution of the war. It is a measure to refund a credit that was contracted quite 10 years before the United States ever entered into the war. A moral obligation does not necessarily exist because a man may say it exists. He must give some reason for his point of view, and no reason has ever been given.

It has been suggested here that the President of the United States promised Liberia a loan of $5,000,000 if she went into the war. There is not a semblance of truth in that statement. This Government did not have to bribe a little cross-roads nation with $5,000,000 to have it enter with us into the war. There was no such promise made, and the conditional credit was based upon the statute.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield that I may ask the Senator from Virginia a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. I have been trying to get a copy of the hearings, but I have been advised that they are out of print, and for that reason I wish to ask the Senator two questions. He speaks of this as being a conditional credit, but has not stated what the conditions were. Will he state the conditions? Secondly, assuming that there were conditions, what were the reasons why they were not complied with?

Mr. GLASS. The war ended in less than a month after the conditions were presented. I will say to the Senator that the conditional credit was authorized by my predecessor and I do not just now recall the details as to the conditions, but I do very distinctly recall the fact that the conditions not having been complied with, when the mission came to this country from Liberia after I had succeeded to the post of Secretary of the Treasury, I declined to have any official communication with the commission.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. May I ask the Senator a question? Regardless of whether the credit extended was conditional or not, does the Senator agree with me that if Liberia actually did not expend any money for prosecuting the war, the United States is not bound to loan the money?

Mr. GLASS. If Liberia, a poor, weak nation, had expended this amount or any other serious amount in the prosecution of the war, as a matter of equity the United States might reimburse her. But there is not an item in the account rendered that has any relation whatever to the prosecution of the war.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I am quite in accord with the Senator. That is the reason why I am arguing that we are not bound by any obligation. I am arguing that we should not authorize this loan, because actually no contracts were entered into and no expenses incurred by Liberia to prosecute the war, regardless of whether the credit was conditional or absolute. If the war ended without her spending a dollar, we are not bound to loan the money to her, because no officials of our Government could loan or agree to loan any foreign Government for any other purpose.

Mr. GLASS. Liberia entered the war because it was to the interest of Liberia to enter the war. She entered the war to be protected by the Navies of Great Britain and the United States against the ravages of the German nation in proximity to her territory. That is the reason why she entered the war. She was not induced to enter by any promise of a loan, and the only credit ever established or that ever could have been established must have been a credit under the statute relating to the prosecution of the war.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. I heartily concur with the Senator from Massachusetts. If the Government of the United States had promised to loan Liberia $5,000,000 to help them in the prosecution of the war and had failed to loan it for any reason whatsoever during the war, and they were to come now to us and say, "Relying upon that promise, we expended this money, we incurred this amount of indebtedness, and we ask that you in good faith keep your promise and loan us the money," I think that would constitute not a legal obligation but a moral obligation which would impel action on our part.

Mr. GLASS. It would be a moral obligation attached to which there could be no sort of question of propriety. The present Secretary of State himself actually said that he realizes that grave questions of propriety might properly intervene as objections to the loan. How could a question of propriety lie against a moral obligation? The two suggestions from the same source are absolutely contradictory. If it is a moral obligation, there could be no question of propriety in meeting the moral obligation.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me for restating my position, the point I was making was, that the war having ended, Liberia does not come to us and say, "We want money to pay obligations which we incurred relying upon your promise," but she comes and says, "We want to borrow from you $5,000,000 to pay some old debts that we owe certain great financial interests in the city of New York contracted some time during the year 1912."

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. Am I to understand the Senator from North Carolina to take the position that Liberia is asking for this loan now purely as a loan and without reference to any so-called moral obligation that may have existed before this time?

Mr. SIMMONS. The very agreement entered into between Liberia and Secretary of State Hughes specifies that the money is to be loaned and to be used in the liquidation of old debts due certain individuals and bankers by the Liberian Government some five or six years before the United States entered into the war.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, my purpose in asserting that I did not feel as strongly as some others that there was not a moral obligation was because of my understanding from correspondence that took place it might well be argued, if one disregarded the law authorizing foreign loans, that there was such an obligation, that it might well be interpreted to place a moral obligation upon our country. Personally I do not think there is, because, regardless of whether the credit was absolute or conditional, Liberia did not incur any expense whatever in the prosecution of the war; and did not come to us until after the war, in June, 1920, and then asked us to advance her money on the credit claimed to have been extended to pay bills which she owed long before the war and for the purpose of new developments.

The language used in the note which passed between the President and the Secretary of State in 1918 and the language used in the note of August 27, 1918, from the Treasury Department to the Secretary of State does not appear to make the credit a conditional one. An extract from that note is as follows:

Referring to our previous correspondence in relation to a loan to the Republic of Liberia, the President has approved the establishment of a credit in favor of the Liberian Government in the amount of $5,000,000.

Other references in the correspondence which passed seem to give reason for the belief on the part of foreign countries that the credit was not a conditional one. It is true, however, as the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] has said, that Secretary of State Lansing did write a communication to the Liberian Government setting forth certain conditions that would have to be complied with before the loan was consummated, and that those conditions were not complied with.

Mr. GLASS. And that fact was communicated to other Governments.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I did not know that; I do not find that in the correspondence which is in the record. I am glad the Senator adds that, but the letter which Secretary Lansing wrote to the Liberian Government on September 12, 1918, shows that the money was available on certain conditions, which it appears were not met.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has the Senator from Massachusetts before him the proposed agreement made by Mr. Secretary Hughes with the Government of Liberia in reference to this loan?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does it refer in any way at all to the supposed obligation?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I glanced over it hurriedly for the very purpose of ascertaining if it referred to any previous obligation, and I do not find any language in it that couples it with any previous obligation.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand the agreement, an entirely new arrangement which was made or proposed to be made since the war?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I so understand.

Mr. President, I took the floor for two purposes—first, to bring out and to put into the RECORD the authority given to United States officials to loan money to foreign Governments. That authority seems to be limited to the loaning of money for the purposes of our national security and defense and prosecuting the war. The second purpose for my rising was to put into the RECORD some of the testimony presented before the Ways and Means Committee of the House at the time the hearings were held on March 22 and March 24, 1922. I should like to have the testimony and cross-examination of Mr. Fred Morris Dearing, acting Assistant Secretary of State, and Mr. Harry A. McBride, American consul, detailed in the Department of State, from page 5 to page 11 inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. FREAR. In order to get at the matter from the beginning: First, Liberia has between 40,000 and 50,000 civilized negroes?

Mr. DEARING. Yes.

Mr. FREAR. And about a million or more uncivilized, and their territory is about 200 miles square in area. In 1871 a loan was made and Liberia said that they were not getting any fair return from that loan. The loan amounted to $440,000. Am I right about that?

Mr. DEARING. I think that is about right.

Mr. FREAR. Then matters went on until this commission went over in 1909 and made their report, and that commission recommended—it ought to be put in the record, I suppose—that commission recommended additional loans be made to Liberia, and that Liberia be financed. Then a loan was made, of which you speak, I assume. There was a loan of $460,000, or something like that, in 1910, I believe.

Now, they did not take up the 1871 loan. That loan of 1871 has never been funded, or refunded, and has not been paid. Is that not true?

Mr. DEARING. I think that I will have to ask Mr. McBride to report on that.

Mr. MCBRIDE. No, sir; the 1912 loan, of which the National City Bank of New York was the fiscal agent, covered the refunding of the loan of 1871 and other outstanding indebtedness.

Mr. FREAR. Well, did it include the 1871 loan?

Mr. MCBRIDE. Yes, sir; the amount which was loaned to Liberia, namely, the $1,700,000, refunded and repaid all foreign loans, including the loan of 1871.

Mr. FREAR. That does not appear in the record, so far as I can ascertain.

Mr. DEARING. Yes, sir.

Mr. FREAR. Well, then, from that date the National City Bank, and Mr. Morgan, and Kuhn, Loeb & Co., and others you mention here, assumed the indebtedness of $1,600,000 or $1,700,000; that is to say, they loaned money to take up these various Liberian loans.

The next step, as I understand, in June, 1918——

Mr. GARNER (interposing). Mr. Frear, while the gentleman nods, the record does not show what his answer is to your questions.

Mr. FREAR. No; just answer the question so the reporter can get the answer.

Mr. DEARING. Certainly. I beg your pardon.

Mr. FREAR. Then, in 1918, in the month of June or thereabouts, negotiations were started to help the Liberian situation because of desperate straits financially; that is, she made that claim. That was before any question of her action regarding the war was taken.

Mr. DEARING. Liberia declared war in August, 1917.

Mr. FREAR. In September, two months before the signing of the armistice, this Government, or people representing this Government, made strong advances to secure at that time this $5,000,000 proposal; that is, this loan for Liberia?

Mr. DEARING. Yes, sir.

Mr. FREAR. That was, as I say, just prior to the end of the war. Nothing more was done regarding the loan until June, 1920, by Liberia; and the reason advanced, as I get from the record, is that the conditions or terms imposed were not satisfactory, and Liberia refused to take action until 1920, in June. That was over a year and a half after the conclusion of the war.

Mr. DEARING. Yes, sir.

Mr. FREAR. Now, Liberia's action during the war was not to help the United States and the Allies, as I gather; but the United States intervened and suggested that she declare war in order to help her own conditions, her own commerce, and we intervened so that Great Britain would cease interfering with that commerce. Now, is not that right? It was to help Liberia that the United States intervened and persuaded Great Britain at that time to allow Liberia's commerce to continue; is not that right?

Mr. MCBRIDE. Well, that is so to this extent: On the west coast of Africa, after the enemy submarine campaign became very effective, there was only one ship every six months, or thereabouts, calling at Monrovia, and the only reason that Great Britain would send a vessel there was for the purpose of leaving food and things of that sort.

Mr. FREAR. Well, of course, Liberia had no vessels, had no army, had no navy, and the effect of this declaration of war was in the interest of Liberia and not to the interest of the Allies, so far as I have been able to discover reasons from the report.

Mr. MCBRIDE. I hardly believe that it can be stated to have been in the interest of Liberia, because Liberia in taking this action to enter the war, lost immediately 85 per cent of her trade, and Liberia was bombarded by German submarines.

Mr. FREAR. Now, where was that trade going at that time?

Mr. MCBRIDE. There were many German merchants in Liberia. There were about a dozen merchants in Monrovia, and nine of them were German, I think—eight or nine—and practically all of their exports, and all of their produce, that was brought from the interior, was bought by the German merchants, who exported the produce.

Mr. FREAR. On what kind of vessels?

Mr. MCBRIDE. German, English, Spanish, and French.

Mr. FREAR. Were the Germans shipping this material during the war on English vessels?

Mr. MCBRIDE. No; not during the war.

Mr. FREAR. Well, of course, the declaration of war on the part of the United States occurred on April 6, 1917. It was subsequent to that time before Liberia declared war, and by that time, of course, the commerce had decreased steadily, I gather from this report.

Now, the loan of the National City Bank, and also representing that due the British and other interests, that is all to be taken care of out of this $5,000,000 loan?

Mr. DEARING. Yes, sir.

Mr. FREAR. I want to see whether I am right about this. The agreement provides and Liberia, I think, has agreed to the condition that the United States shall, through our President, appoint a financial commissioner at $15,000 and an assistant at $10,000, an auditor at $6,000, and numerous other officials, who will administer the financial conditions at Liberia.

Mr. DEARING. Yes, sir.

Mr. FREAR. The effect of that is that these debts that now exist, and which are not at par—are the Liberian bonds selling at par to-day, the Liberian securities?

Mr. DEARING. No; they are below par.

Mr. FREAR. Do you know at what figure they are selling?

Mr. DEARING. Can you answer that question, Mr. McBride?

Mr. MCBRIDE. About 98 or 99.

Mr. FREAR. At about 98 or 99. What interest do they bear?

Mr. MCBRIDE. Five per cent.

Mr. GARNER. When did they sell at that?

Mr. MCBRIDE. They have been at that figure since, as a matter of fact, since the $5,000,000 loan was first announced to Liberia. Before that I think they were selling for about 75 to 80, and sometimes going up as high as 85.

Mr. FREAR. They are receiving that quotation now for their securities by reason of the prestige given on account of this $5,000,000 loan?

Mr. MCBRIDE. I think so; yes.

Mr. FREAR. One further question I have in mind, and that is under the law to secure this loan Liberia must pay this financial commissioner $15,000, the assistant $10,000, and an auditor $6,000, and that commission, consisting of the commissioner, the assistant, together with a man representing the Liberian treasury, who will determine the value of these securities. That is true, is it not?

Mr. MCBRIDE. No, sir.

Mr. DEARING. We do not see how they could determine the value of them.

Mr. FREAR. Well, the settlement is to be had out of the $5,000,000; is that right?

Mr. MCBRIDE. I do not understand just what you mean by "determine the value of the securities."

Mr. FREAR. On what basis they shall be taken up.

Mr. MCBRIDE. The law and the agreement of 1912 stipulates that they shall be redeemed at 102½ per cent up to July 1, 1922, and thereafter may be redeemed at par.

Mr. FREAR. Now, here is a proviso in this pamphlet, under Article VII, page 75, which provides:

"None of the provisions of the present plan shall be deemed or construed to create any trust or obligation in favor of any holder of any of the outstanding obligations of indebtedness of Liberia or in favor of any owner of the coupons or claim for interest on, or in respect of, any thereof, or in favor of any holder of any claims against Liberia. Any and all claims against the Government of Liberia, which may not be charged under the provisions of clauses 3, 4, and 5 of Article I of the present plan shall be submitted to a claims commission composed of the secretary of the treasury of Liberia, the auditor and financial commissioner. This claims commission shall have power to determine the validity of any and all such claims and its decision shall be binding."

Now, Articles III, IV, and V relate to the specific debts?

Mr. MCBRIDE. Yes; those relate to the specific debts of Liberia. The claims commission would, I understand, only deal with indebtedness or claims not provided for in the plan.

Mr. FREAR. In other words, Liberia has one commissioner and the United States has two; Liberia has one vote and the United States has two votes in the allocation of the money. That is true, is it not?

Mr. MCBRIDE. Except for the fact that these men are not appointed by the President of the United States. They are designated by the President of the United States and appointed by the President of Liberia.

Mr. FREAR. They are not appointed by the President of the United States?

Mr. MCBRIDE. They are designated by the President of the United States, and appointed by the President of Liberia.

Mr. FREAR. Yes; but to get the $5,000,000 they have got to do what we provide. Have they a depository? What is the depository for the Liberian bonds? That is, are they under the control or not of American interests? Is there a bank there or how do they handle their funds.

Mr. MCBRIDE. There is only one bank there now, and that is a British bank. I do not know what arrangements will be made, of course, under the new loan. I should think, perhaps, that some other arrangement should be made.

Mr. FREAR. Now, what is to be done with the balance of the money after you take up those claims, and you have paid this $1,700,000 to the National City Bank of New York City; what is to be done with the balance?

Mr. DEARING. The balance of that money we want to use for the general administrative expenses of the country, of course, and also for certain improvements and developments which will enable Liberia to get on her feet and take care of her own finances.

Mr. FREAR. Now, returning to the record——

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). And included in that is the establishment of a public-school system, which is to be provided for.

Mr. DEARING. There are a number of things provided for.

Mr. FREAR. River and harbor improvements and many things of that kind, and $80,000 is set aside for the traveling expenses of the financial commission and for their salaries while in transit and the commissioner is to receive $15,000 salary. Now, do you think that that is an excessive amount to be paid to an official for this little community of people of 40,000 or 50,000?

Mr. DEARING. That figure was agreed upon when we negotiated with President King, of Liberia, who was over here with the financial commission. We went into the matter very carefully, and we felt, and President King felt, and is satisfied, that a salary of that size ought to be paid in order to get men with sufficient ability and skill to administer the plan so that it would be certain to result to the benefit of Liberia, a country of 45,000 square miles and 2,000,000 people.

Mr. FREAR. Is that the reason why $10,000 was also fixed as the salary of the assistant, in view of the fact that 1,960,000 of those people are uncivilized and the country has less real business than the average city of 50,000 people?

Mr. DEARING. Every one of those salaries was carefully considered by us.

Mr. FREAR. But does not that impress you as being a rather large salary list, $80,000 annually for these few officials who are to administer the affairs of Liberia, which to-day is unable to pay interest on $1,700,000 indebtedness?

Mr. DEARING. We do not think so, especially because of the special conditions, climatic conditions, and the backwardness of the development of the country, and so forth, which makes it necessary to pay a somewhat better salary to get the same grade of skilled men who in another situation would accept less.

Mr. FREAR. Now, one more question. Could you give the committee the several amounts that are to be paid to the various people not mentioned here by the National City Bank, which I believe is set out in the position of trustee, are they not, here?

Mr. DEARING. Yes.

Mr. FREAR. Can you give the names and amounts of different people owning the various amounts of securities?

Mr. DEARING. May I ask Mr. McBride to answer that question?

Mr. FREAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCBRIDE. The $1,700,000 indebtedness is held by the bondholders of the 1912 loan, not the National City Bank. The National City Bank is the fiscal agent.

Mr. FREAR. Yes; I understand; trustee, as I understand. Who are the bondholders, and how much do they own?

Mr. MCBRIDE. I think that the majority are in Great Britain. There is quite a block of stock held in Holland, France, and some in Germany, and some in the United States.

Mr. FREAR. Well, now, what is held in the United States; can you tell us?

Mr. MCBRIDE. I do not know, sir.

Mr. FREAR. Have you any way of determining?

The CHAIRMAN. All of that is set out in the pamphlet.

Mr. FREAR. I beg your pardon. I have looked over it very carefully, and I can not find anything.

The CHAIRMAN. The amount is not given?

Mr. FREAR. Let me read on page 66?

"One million six hundred and fifty thousand dollars, or such less amount as may be necessary for the purpose of enabling the Government of Liberia to purchase or redeem all of its bonds now issued and outstanding, representing the 5 per cent sinking fund gold loan, due July 1, 1952, under the agreement for refunding loans dated March 7, 1912, between the Republic of Liberia, of the first part, and J. P. Morgan & Co., Kuhn, Loeb & Co., the National City Bank of New York, and First National Bank of New York, acting for themselves and for Robert Fleming & Co., Banque de Paris et des Pays Bas, M. M. Warburg & Co., and Hope & Co., and for others, of the second part, including such payments of interest, costs of notices and other payments or deposits, as well as payments which may be due from the Government of Liberia under the fiscal-agency agreement dated March 7, 1912, between the Republic of Liberia, of the first part, and the National City Bank of New York, of the second part, as shall be necessary to terminate all obligations of the Government of Liberia under all said bonds or under the agreement for refunding loan or the fiscal-agency agreement above mentioned, as shall entitle the Government of Liberia, in accordance with the terms of said agreement, to the cancellation and destruction of all said bonds held by the fiscal agents in the sinking fund mentioned in said agreements."

Under that is where the National City Bank acts as agent for the other party?

Mr. MCBRIDE. They act as the fiscal agents for the Government of Liberia.

Mr. FREAR. Now, can you give the amount due to the various parties in America, due here to-day under that?

Mr. MCBRIDE. No, sir; I do not know. I do not know whether there is any way to get that information.

Mr. FREAR. But this Government is paying $5,000,000 in order to take up this indebtedness, and we ought, as a matter of fact, to know what it is to cover, or at least I think we ought to know.

Mr. MCBRIDE. We understand that the Liberian bonds held in this country would amount to about $200,000.

Mr. COLLIER. How much?

Mr. MCBRIDE. I think about $200,000. I am not sure. We know that a large majority of the Liberian bonds are held in Great Britain to-day.

Mr. FREAR. Those are all owned by private holders, of course?

Mr. MCBRIDE. I think so. There may be one or two banks which have been holding some, but not a very large amount.

Mr. FREAR. That is all at present.

Mr. McKELLAR. Before the Senator takes his seat I desire to ask him a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. What constitutional authority have we in times of peace to lend to foreign Governments the people's money which is taken by taxation?

We may talk about "moral obligation," but have we the constitutional right to do it? We surely have not the moral right to lend money to foreign nations in times of peace; at least, it seems to me it is of very doubtful moral propriety even if we have the constitutional right. What does the Senator from Massachusetts have to say, however, about the constitutional right?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Of course we have no right to loan money to any foreign Government without congressional authority; and I do not suppose anyone claims that there is any authority now to loan money to Liberia unless it grows out of a legal obligation or a moral obligation as binding as a legal one as a result of promises made during the time when Liberia and the United States were engaged as allies in prosecuting the war.

Mr. OWEN. Before the Senator from Massachusetts sits down I desire to ask him a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. OWEN. I recall that the Senator made a reference to the President having authorized this loan. Is not that authority of the President necessarily restricted to the statute under which the President was then acting?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. OWEN. And do not the conditions of that law, which require the money to be expended for war purposes, attach directly to the authority granted to the President?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Certainly; and that was the force of my whole argument; that we were not bound to loan Liberia one dollar, because, no matter what promises our officials made, no matter what the credits, conditional or otherwise, were, Liberia did not expend any money and does not ask us now to recoup her for any expense which she made to prosecute the war.

Mr. OWEN. Surely the manner in which this claim is presented here, with the provision for the disposition of money in the payment of the ancient and honorable debts, which I think ought to be paid by Liberia to the people from whom she borrowed the money, makes it appear as if this alleged moral right had no real existence but was a Trojan horse behind which is stalking the claim of New York bankers.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I might add that the testimony which I have put into the RECORD does fully into the question of the claims against Liberia that will be paid in case this money is loaned by our Government and contains a résumé of Liberia's financial relations with the United States Government, other countries, and banking institutions.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], who is in charge of the pending joint resolution, a question in reference to the salaries which are therein provided. I wish to ask the Senator if the salaries are to be paid out of the loan. I have not the whole agreement before me and I can not obtain a copy of it.

Mr. CURTIS. I understand that they will be paid out of the revenues of the Liberian Government.

Mr. McKELLAR. That can not be done because the revenues of Liberia, apparently, are not at all sufficient to pay half of the salaries provided for by the joint resolution.

Mr. CURTIS. It will be found that the revenues of the Liberian Government will pay the salaries.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let us suppose for a moment that the Liberian revenues are not sufficient to pay the salaries; will the United States Government then pay the salaries of these individuals?

Mr. CURTIS. I think not, under the agreement.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator thinks not.

Mr. CURTIS. No.

Mr. McKELLAR. If we appoint them, would we not be in honor bound to pay them after having appointed them?

Mr. CURTIS. I do not think so, if they accept the appointments under the known conditions.

Mr. McKELLAR. We have been talking considerably about moral obligations; would there not be a very strong moral obligation on our part, after appointing these men, to pay them the salaries we agreed to pay them if the Liberian revenues were not sufficient for that purpose?

Mr. CURTIS. I do not think there is any danger of such a contingency arising.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator think that any men could be found who would go to Liberia and undertake this work merely upon the assurance of the Liberian Government that their salaries would be paid?

Mr. CURTIS. Really, I do not know as to that.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator having the joint resolution in charge whether he expects to conclude the discussion and take a vote upon the measure to-night. If he does, I wish to proceed with what I have to say, because I think that I can demonstrate beyond question that there is a moral obligation involved.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, if we could do so, I should like to have a vote upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi and then have an executive session. I understand that a number of Senators who have left the Chamber want to be here when the vote is taken.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. It was really at my suggestion, I presume, that the Senator from Kansas consented that the measure go over. I find that several Senators have gone away, not anticipating a vote this afternoon, and I should like for them to be here. I do not think we have anything crowding to-morrow, and we might get through then.

Mr. CURTIS. I am perfectly willing to take a vote on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi and then to hold an executive session and adjourn until 12 o'clock to-morrow, if that is satisfactory.

Mr. SMOOT. In view of the situation as presented by the Senator from Kansas, I do not care about proceeding now; but I will occupy a short time to-morrow.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the Senator from Utah yields the floor, in order that there may be no misunderstanding, I wish to say that I do not know what the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi is, and I should not want to enter into an agreement to vote on it to-night.

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment of the Senator from Mississippi provides a number of additional inspectors of locomotive boilers.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. I merely wish to make an observation for the benefit of the Senator from Nebraska. The object of the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi is to take care of some parties who are out of jobs, such as the Senator from Nebraska spoke of a while ago. The amendment will provide places for some 35 of them.
